Republic Offer Raises Hope of Steel Peace; U.S. May Act on Coal

No. 3 Producer Proposes Terms; Truman Aide Sees 'Week of Decision'

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

A peace offer by Republic, the Nation's third largest steelmaker, yesterday brightened the prospect of a strike settlement in most of the steel industry by the end of this week.

Representatives of the company and the United Steelworkers held a four-hour session of "exploratory discussions" yesterday afternoon, recessed for two hours and then went into a night session.

CIO President Philip Murray, who also heads the Steelworkers, reported "no comment" after both sessions. Another meeting was set for today.

But the outlook for a settlement of the coal strike was decidedly black.

A top presidential adviser said yesterday this week is a "week of decision" in the 48-day soft coal walkout.

Unless mediation efforts produce "real progress" toward attaining peace between the mine owners and John L. Lewis' United Mine Workers, the adviser said, a more drastic type of Government intervention can be expected next weekend.

Fact-Finding Board Held Likely

The intervention probably will be in the form of a fact-finding board authorized to make recommendations as a basis for settling the coal strike, the adviser said.

Details of the proposal by Republic were not made public, but it was known to be along the lines of the formula that ended the CIO Steelworkers' strike against Bethlehem—No. 2 steel producer—last Monday.

This formula provided for pensions of $100 a month, financed by the company and Social Security, and for social insurance jointly financed by the company and employes.

William F. Donovan, Cleveland district director of the Steelworkers, said that union negotiators were prepared to accept Republic's offer if approved by Murray.

Smaller Firms Sign Up

Bethlehem's formula ended the strike, which began October 1, for some 80,000 employes. Republic has some 54,000 workers.

Other major companies—such as Jones & Laughlin, and Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co.—also are engaged in talks with union negotiators, and hopes were high for settlement this week. Two smaller steel companies, Lukens, with 5000

Argentine Police Seize 1000 Reds In Meeting Raid

Buenos Aires, Argentina, Nov. 5 (U.P.).—More than 1000 Communists were arrested late today when police raided a Communist meeting celebrating the thirty-second anniversary of the Russian revolution.

An official police announcement said the Communists gathered before their party headquarters, which police ordered closed a fortnight ago for alleged violations of municipal regulations.

Communist quarters said among those arrested was Party Leader Victorio Codovila.

Some eye witnesses said the Communists were arrested after failing to obey police orders to disperse.

Missing Girl's Father Flies From Tokyo, Offers $1000

LUCILLE GAREY
. . . missing for week

A distraught and hollow-eyed father, who flew home from Tokyo to search, offered a $1000 reward yesterday for information leading to the return of his missing 13-year-old daughter.

He is Thomas F. Garey, 1925 Park rd. nw., a civilian consulting engineer attached to the Department of the Army in Japan. The daughter is Lucille Garey, who disappeared last Sunday afternoon after leaving her home ostensibly to visit a friend who lives nearby. She was an 8A student at Alice Deal Junior High School.

Garey, who arrived Thursday, said the Army flew him home in 30 hours and that he has had no sleep since.

"I will give all I have to see that she gets back," he said yesterday. "It is $1000. I am not a wealthy man."

After consultation with police officials, the reward offer was worded

Poll-Tax Issue To Highlight Virginia Vote

'Liberal' Opponents Confident Campbell Proposals Will Lose

By Richard Morris
Post Reporter

A controversial constitutional amendment to repeal the poll tax is the main issue to be presented to Virginia voters when they ballot Tuesday.

The so-called Campbell amendments, which would repeal the poll tax with certain conditions, are the highlight of an otherwise stereotyped situation. The Democratic organization is expected to prevail in all State-wide contests.

A peculiar paradox exists in the political alignment for and against the amendments, which bear the name of their sponsor, Assembly Delegate Stuart B. Campbell of Wytheville.

Fight for Repeal

Conservative Democrats in the State organization, heretofore satisfied with the poll tax, have led the fight for its repeal. "Liberals" and "antiorganization" Democrats, who made a strong showing in the August primary, have reversed their customary position against a poll tax to urge rejection of the amendments.

Supporters of the amendments contend that repeal of the poll tax in Federal elections is inevitable when Congress convenes again. Unless the State law is wiped out, they say, there will be a need for two sets of registration books.

Those who want to retain the status quo argue that repeal of the poll tax is most desirable, but not with the "excess baggage" proposed in the Campbell amendments. The General Assembly would have too much authority over suffrage, they maintain.

Opponents Confident

Opponents of the changes are nursing an attitude of confidence that has been encouraged by apparent uncertainty among Administration leaders, who admittedly have little to lose either way.

In State-wide contests for office, however, it is a foregone con-

Hardest Task Ahead, Warns Chest Leader

After Speedy Start, Workers Must Now 'Sell,' Luchs Says

Workers in the Community Chest campaign will begin the second week of their formal reporting period Monday with a warning from General Chairman Frank J. Luchs to avoid overconfidence.

Commenting on the rapid pace of the drive which resulted in 50.16 percent of the $3,991,719 goal reported last week, Luchs said in part: "My gratitude goes to all workers in all units, but they must realize with me that we still have a long, hard road ahead of us.

"Many of our best friends, both corporate and individual, are represented in initial pledges from Advance Gifts—business No. 1 and Government units.

"From now on the solicitors will be selling using all the techniques made available to them prior to the campaign's opening," Luchs said.

St. Louis, Nov. 5 (U.P.).—Vice President Alben W. Barkley was at the bedside of his ailing bride-to-be today after a hurried flight from Washington.

Barkley visited Mrs. Carleton S. Hadley, attractive 38-year-old widow, at St. Luke's Hospital today for the second time since his arrival here last night.

The "Veep" spent the morning at Mrs. Hadley's bedside, left briefly shortly after noon and then returned. He had dinner with his fiancee in her room. He plans to stay here until Monday.

Mrs. Hadley entered the hospital Thursday night with a slight case of influenza and fatigue. Her illness canceled plans of the couple to continue their search for a wedding ring this weekend.

Fire Sweeps Mrs. Beale's Stone House

Flames 100 Feet High Raise Fear for Dumbarton Oaks, Draw Thousands

Flames which at times shot 100 feet in the air last night swept the stone house at 3041 Whitehaven st. nw. belonging to Mrs. Truxtun Beale, Washington socialite.

Thousands of spectators from miles away thronged to the scene as the flames poured through the two-story structure. Many were fearful it would destroy the historic Dumbarton Oaks reservation lying just to the south.

Flames, witnesses said, suddenly burst from the house, causing three alarms to be sounded, the first at 11:20 p. m., the last at 11:37. A few trees in the immediate area of the house also burst into flames, but were quickly saved.

Although the cause could not be immediately determined, Mrs. Beale told a Washington Post reporter that the fire may have been caused by juveniles who have been known to break into the unoccupied house from time to time.

Concerned About Trees

She said she did not know the value of the house, which is called Clifton, adding that she had been more concerned about the many valuable white oaks and American elms on the six-acre estate surrounding it.

Clifton, she said, has been unoccupied for about 10 years except for a summer period when a policeman lived in it until vandalism made it uninhabitable.

She and her husband, the late Truxtun Beale, a former United States Minister to Persia, bought the house about 20 years ago, she said, when it was thought the Government might take over the historic Decatur House, Mrs. Beale's home at Jackson pl. and H st nw.

Built in 1880s

Mrs. Beale said she never had any intention of moving into the house unless the Government took over Decatur House, and bought Clifton more for its beautiful site. It was built, she added, in the 1880s by James Elverson, former publisher of the Philadelphia Inquirer.

Firemen said the walls appeared to be about 50 inches thick and the interior, devoid of furniture, was burned out.

Firefighters concentrated their efforts on keeping the flames from spreading. They [illegible] the fire localized within [illegible] minutes.

Children or Tramps Blamed

After preliminary investigation, firemen said they believed the fire was caused by children or tramps.

Many persons were drawn to the vicinity in the belief that the fire was at one of the embassies, the Naval Observatory or Washington Cathedral, all located nearby.

Situated on a hill, the house in flames was a spectacle for miles around, causing motorists to jam the area for blocks, as extra police worked to detour traffic away and keep the crowds in hand. Meanwhile, newspaper switchboards were kept busy answering queries from persons who heard the fire apparatus or saw the flames.

Pilot in Crash Killing 55 Saw Plane Like B-25 About to Land But Did Not See Ill-Fated DC-4

2½-Page Statement By Bolivian Flier Makes No Mention Of Eastern Craft

By Benjamin C. Bradlee
Post Reporter

Erick Rios Bridoux, pilot of the P-38 which collided Tuesday with an Eastern Air Lines DC-4 at the cost of 55 lives, has confirmed the presence of a third plane over National Airport just before the crash.

Bridoux has told CAB investigators that he saw a twin-engined, twin-tailed plane about to land. He said he saw no other plane. In his unsigned, two-and-a-half-page statement, he made no mention of seeing the Eastern transport, which had four engines and one tail.

The Washington Post revealed for the first time yesterday that a Bolling Air Force Base B-25, the twin-engined, twin-tailed Mitchell bomber, made a simulated instrument landing over National Airport a few minutes before the crash.

But it was agreed that disclosure of the presence of the B-25 in the area still left authorities without the complete answer to the tragedy. Exact time of the crash was still not fixed. The Bolivian pilot apparently violated approach procedure, even if he had been confused. And the pilot of the B-25 said his plane could not have contributed to the crash.

Confusion Possible

In his statement, Bridoux, a Bolivian pilot, identified the third plane as a "twin-engined Beech," a twin-engined, twin-tailed plane smaller than the B-25. Expert fliers report, however, that the two planes might be confused at great distances.

Bridoux was the only survivor of the worst airline disaster in history. At Alexandria Hospital, where he is suffering from a broken back and pneumonia, authorities said Bridoux passed "a good day" and that his condition was improved.

The CAB was known to be investigating the possibility that Bridoux, told by the National Airport Tower that he was "second to land," understood those instructions to mean that he was to land immediately after the B-25.

Could Have Been Avoided

Even if the presence of the B-25 did confuse the Bolivian pilot and contributed to the disaster, airport officials said Bridoux could have avoided the crash by flying once around the airport before landing as ordered.

New York, Nov. 5 (AP).—President [Truma]n tonight entered the New [York] campaign with direct radio [appe]al to the State's voters for the [elect]ion Tuesday of Herbert H. Lehman as United States Senator, [and] the whole Democratic ticket.

Speaking from the White House, Mr. Truman said the former Democratic Governor would bring to Washington a "constructive and progressive approach to domestic affairs."

He said Lehman also has had "wide personal experience and mature wisdom in the handling of our foreign relations" and knows at first hand "the nature of our international problems."

This was a reference to Lehman's one-time directorship of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration. It was regarded as a reply to Republican arguments, particularly those of Governor Dewey, that John Foster Dulles should be elected because of his wide knowledge of foreign affairs.

Dulles, Lehman's Republican opponent for the one year remaining of the term of Democrat Robert F. Wagner who resigned because of poor health, now holds the Wagner seat by appointment of Governor Dewey. He is a former delegate to the United Nations and is now a foreign policy adviser to the Republican leadership.

Critics Face Boiling in Oils By Vaughan

Maj. Gen. Harry H. Vaughan has tried to even the score with Senators who questioned him last summer at the five percenter hearings by doing an oil painting depicting them as "pumpkin heads."

Disclosure yesterday of the existence of the painting, which will be shown at an exhibition of works of prominent amateurs opening in New York on Monday, brought some caustic comments from lampooned members of the Senate Investigations Subcommittee.

Senator Joseph R. McCarthy (R., Wisc.) cracked back that it would be a relief to American taxpayers if they could be sure General Vaughan had shifted his hobby "from fixing to painting."

The Senator added that if the general showed the same facility in painting that he did in doing fa-

Army Reveals New 2-Bladed Striking Arm

Demonstration Given Of 3-Element Ground Team Coordination

Ft. Benning, Ga., Nov. 5 (AP).—The Army today disclosed that its striking edge in any future war will be a two-bladed weapon — powerful infantry-artillery-tank teams and stabbing airborne attacks.

Before visiting high Army officials and a group of civilian leaders today, it demonstrated the highly coordinated use of the three elements of the ground force team.

Assembled on a simulated battlefield were an infantry battalion, a tank company, a platoon of 4.2-inch mortars (one of the most useful weapons of the infantry) and a field artillery battalion.

Their job was to jump off from a point near the observers and take an enemy fortification on a hill a mile and a half distant. Tight control and split-second timing were necessary to move the hundreds of men and the tanks forward in a closely synchonized advance while laying down heavy fire with a variety of weapons. Some of the details of technique used were so new that they still could not be disclosed publicly.

The ground force action followed a demonstration yesterday in which airborne units showed all the intricate operations that go into dropping paratroopers and glider-carried infantry close up to or even behind an enemy's line.

Coincidentally, the Army today had interest in another field of aviation.

Toll of Storm In Philippines May Reach 644

Manila, Nov. 5. (U.P.)—The Philippines Red Cross today described last Tuesday's central Phillipines storm as a "national disaster" that may have taken 644 lives.

A report to international headquarters in Geneva, Switzerland, listed 192 known dead and 452 missing, with 450,000 destitute. Property damage was estimated at 50 million dollars.

Previously the Red Cross set the known dead at 271, with 25,000 homeless and 6000 houses and buildings destroyed.

Press reports said that between 500 and 600 were killed in the town of Kabankalan in Negros Occidental Province. These reports were not confirmed.

The Red Cross report anticipated its local offices would be unable to meet relief requirements and asked assistance of other societies.

Iron Workers Beat Columbus To America, Engineer Asserts

By The Associated Press

Evidence that people skilled in ironwork migrated to America long before Columbus' arrival was claimed today by Arlington H. Mallery, Washington engineer.

Metallurgists of the National Bureau of Standards and archeologists of the Smithsonian Institution said they could neither confirm nor discount Mallery's claims at this time.

Mallery, consulting industrial and structural engineer, lives at 2003 O st. nw. His metallurgical research has been a hobby carried out in part before World War II, and more intensively since he has been partially disabled and undergoing treatment at Walter Reed Hospital for injuries suffered in his service with the Army Transport Service.

Claiming evidence of the existence of an ironworking people in pre-Columbian Virginia and Ohio, Mallery believes that they were wiped out by the same "Black

At Federal Request

Strike Put Off By Plumbers' Assistants

A strike of 300 AFL plumber laborers, scheduled to hit the commercial construction industry in this area Monday morning, was postponed yesterday at the request of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service.

Leo Nazdin, president of the Laborers District Council, said the walkout was held up at the request of Howard T. Colvin, associalite director of the Conciliation Service, to give Federal mediators an opportunity to enter the dispute.

The plumber laborers, who belong to Local 115 of the International Hod Carriers and Laborers Union have been seeking a 10-cents-an-hour pay increase from the plumber employers. The laborers now get $1.50 an hour.

The union contends that 10-cents-an-hour has been the general settlement in the local construction industry since the six-weeks' strike of the AFL carpenters and building laborers last summer. The employers contend that the plumbing laborers are already getting more than the building laborers.

Federal Mediator To Enter Smoot Strike

The Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service will step into another dispute Monday. Mediator James Holden has called together negotiators for the Smoot Sand and Gravel Co. and the AFL stationary engineers and truck drivers in another conciliation effort to end the strike, begun more than two months ago, over wages. The 175 union employes asked for a 25-cents-an-hour pay hike.

Truckmen to Meet On Safeway Offer

Some 250 AFL truck drivers were to meet at union headquarters today to vote on a contract offer made by the Safeway Stores. The union had asked for increases ranging from $15 to $20 a week. Earlier this week 500 AFL warehousemen—like the truck drivers associated with the Teamsters Union—signed a new contract with Safeway providing $6 weekly pay increases. The warehousemen had asked for $10 more a week.

New York, Nov. 5 (NYHT).—A revolutionary textile dyeing and finishing process has been developed through what is believed the first successful commercial use of radioactive source materials in industry.

While successfully applied only to textiles thus far, experiments indicate the new process may have important applications in other industries.

The process, two and one-half years in development by Vat-Craft Corp. under license from the Atomic Energy Commission, made its first successful commercial run last week at Shamrock Textile Processing Co., Paterson, N. J., when the first successful dyeing of acetate fabrics in vat colors was achieved.

Through a new compound manufactured from radioactive source materials, Vat-Craft Corp. uses photo-chemistry in the dyeing and finishing of all types of textiles. The method is applied through a radically different type of equipment that not only requires far less space than normal finishing plants, but in a single operation completely dyes, finishes and dries the fabric at a reported speed of 300 yards a minute.

User Few Operators

A normal finishing plant, using regular dyeing operations, was able to finish 90,000 yards of fabric in two 10-hour shifts, employing 70 men.

The new equipment, using a handful of operators, indicated in tests it was able to turn out about 130,000 yards of completely dyed fabric in the same period.

American Viscose Corp. has devoted its textile research department at Marcus Hook, Pa., to engineering, testing and evaluation of the work.

The equipment was developed by Vat-Craft's technical staff in collaboration with Proctor & Schwartz, Philadelphia, manufacturers of the first production machine; General Electric Co., manufacturers of special lamps for developing colors; Corning Glass Works, manufacturers of special silica glass for the development chamber, and the Van Vlaanderen Machine Co., designers of special dye padders used.

The hint of the process was released last week with the simple announcement by John M. Gessler, president of Vat-Craft Corp., that successful commercial dye runs of acetate fabrics in vat colors, heretofore impossible, had taken place.

In the Vat-Craft processes, fibers are coated or impregnated with soluble materials which, on exposure to radiation, are converted to insoluble colored pigments. These become an integral part of the fabric or sheet and have imparted to the base a permanent color that cannot be removed by any means.

Catalytic Agent Used

The process, to be economically feasible, must proceed at high speed. To accomplish this, an additional agent is included in the coating solution. The agent acts like an amplifier.

This catalytic agent, designated as catalyst UA-1, is manufactured from radioactive source materials under the AEC license.

Exceedingly small amounts of this compound, added to the solution coated on the sheet or web base, increases the efficiency of outside radiation thousandfold to a point where color can be precipitated on any material at high rates of speed.

Republic Steel Offers Terms

employes, and McLouth, with 1800, signed agreements yesterday.

There also was gloomy news on the steel front.

Some 10,000 employes of Timken Roller Bearing Co. walked out early yesterday morning in a demand for noncontributory pensions. Negotiations between Inland Steel and the Steelworkers broke down temporarily. Inland offered to consider the Bethlehem formula, according to union sources, but insisted the employes return to work pending negotiations.

There was no indication when United States Steel, the Nation's No. 1 producer and chief opponent of the noncontributory pension plan would enter new negotiations with the union. United States Steel has asked for new meetings, but thus far has received no replay from Murray.

Convention Out of the Way

The peace movement in the steel industry, launched by Bethlehem's formula early last week, will pick up speed this week. With the CIO convention out of the way Murray and his key assistants will be able to devote more attention to delicate, highly complex business of negotiations.

Meanwhile, Federal Conciliation Chief Cyrus S. Ching—who was instrumental in bringing Bethlehem and the steelworkers together for their historic settlement—quietly sought a similar opening in the coal strike.

On Friday, Ching held a secret session with John L. Lewis, and after the confab asked representatives of the Southern Coal Producers Association to meet with Ching here Monday. Ching probably will confer with negotiators of the other group of operators—National Bituminous Wage Conference—later this week.

Seeks to Break Solid Front

Lewis also was seeking his own end to the strike of 400,000 soft-coal miners in a move to win contract improvements. Lewis was seeking to drive a wedge in the solid front of operators by negotiating a separate contract with the Illinois and Indiana operators.

These two States have been hard hit by the cold weather; are short of home-consuming soft coal, and contain high-efficiency mines in which the labor cost is relatively low.

The UMW leader has called a meeting of his 200-man policy committee in Chicago for Monday. Lewis has kept to himself the real purpose of the meeting. He rarely calls the policy committee together, and then only for important business.

Mayor David L. Lawrence of Pittsburgh appealed to Lewis for emergency coal relief. The mayor told Lewis by phone that the city's retail soft-coal supply was near the vanishing point. Lewis turned down the request with the rejoinder: "Talk to those guys in the Duquesne Club."

CIO to Hear Red Charges Against Nine

Cleveland, Nov. 5 (AP).—The CIO slowed down its purge of left-wing unions today to allow hearings on pro-Communist charges against 10 unions and 9 leaders.

The executive board, meeting to carry out the anti-leftist instructions of the convention which ended last night, set up committees to air the charges.

Between the convention and the board the CIO now has gone this far in ridding itself of a "small but noisy clique" which President Philip Murray said was harassing the CIO by adhering to Communist Party programs:

1. Expelled the United Electrical Workers and Farm Equipment Workers, with about 470,000 members. It moved to grab off those members by creating a new right-wing union in the electric and radio field, under the guidance of James B. Carey, and turned over farm equipment plant jurisdiction to Walter Reuther's United Auto Workers.

Nine to Get Hearings

2. Ruled that Ben Gold, head of the Fur and Leather Workers, could not serve on the executive board because he admits to being a member of the Communist Party.
3. Gave the nine other left-wing union heads nominated to the executive board a chance to be heard by three committees on charges of pro-Communism.
4. Paved the way for ouster of the 10 unions, accused of following Communist Party policies rather than those of the CIO.
5. Voted that the CIO's top 11 officers now will sign the anti-Communist affidavits required by the Taft-Hartley Act—26 months after it went into effect—so that the CIO's industrial union councils can have access to the National Labor Relations Board.

Leaders, Unions Listed

These are the individuals and unions on whom the hearings will be held in the next three months:

Joseph Selly and American Communications Association; Donald Henderson and Food, Tobacco and Agricultural Workers; Joseph Jurich and the Fishermen and Allied Workers; Harry Bridges and the Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union; John Clark and the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers; Hugh Bryson and the Marine Cooks and Stewards; Morris [illegible] and the Furniture Workers; [illegible] Flaxer and the United [illegible] Workers; James Durkin and the Office and Professional Workers.

Gold's Fur and Leather Workers also will be investigated.

November Coal Needs Can Be Met

District coal dealers say they will be able to meet all coal demands through the month of November, even if the soft coal strike should continue.

Despite the possibility of a cold snap, they feel supplies of bituminous coal on hand for commercial use will last out the month.

Hard coal for domestic consumption is plentiful, and only a "sympathy strike" by hard coal miners could cause any shortage, it was said.

Situation Elsewhere

Latest estimates by officials of the Virginia Electric & Power Co. place coal stockpiles at its Newport News gas plant at about 29 or 30 days.

In Richmond, Governor Tuck and the Emergency Fuel Commission denied negotiations are under way or planned with John L. Lewis for settlement of the strike affecting southwest Virginia mines.

Some of the struck union mines have been allowed to operate occasionally to supply "house coal" for the miners' own homes, and some miners, unable to obtain credit at company stores, have organized their own food relief agencies to keep their families fed.

U. S. Has Coal on Hand

General Services Administration, which heats Federal and District Government buildings, says it has enough coal on hand to last until Christmas. Some small deliveries of soft coal are still coming in, according to Ferdinand Kaufholz, chief engineer for building management.

Among coal retailers, W. F. Chrisman, purchasing agent for Griffith Consumers, said his company is taking on no new customers, but is confident it can supply present customers this month.

W. H. Hessick & Son, Inc., fears only "panic" buying among its customers, although Fred Hessick, president, foresees dwindling stocks of soft coal by the month's end.

A. P. Brown, general manager of Rinaldi Coal Co., says his firm is not "alarmed" at this time.

United Electrical Workers' Head Fires Right-Wing Officials of Union Across U. S.

Pittsburgh, Nov. 5 (AP).—Tension increased today in the family quarrel of right and left-wingers in the United Electrical Workers Union but a big segment of the electrical industry said it wants no part in the fight.

Left Wing President Albert J. Fitzgerald of the newly independent union is dispatching telegrams to right-wing U.E. officials all over the country telling them they are fired.

His 450,000-man union was expelled on grounds of leftism by the national CIO in its Cleveland convention earlier this week. The long-smoldering fight between the equally divided right and left-wing factions in the U.E. broke into open warfare following the expulsion.

No Part Taken

A spokesman for the Westinghouse Electric Corp., which employs some 70,000 U.E. members, emphasized it is taking no sides in the battle.

The announcement was in answer to published reports that the company would deal with the left-controlled U.E. on the local level and a new electrical workers union just chartered by the CIO on the national level.

Fitzgerald and left-wingers in the U.E. are battling to keep the union a going concern as an independent by ousting rightist leaders and gaining complete control of all locals.

Many right-wing members are voting to desert the U.E. and join the CIO's new union. But they're meeting with trouble. For example:

In Syracuse, N. Y., a state Supreme Court justice issued a temporary injunction restraining officers of a local from holding a meeting to vote on withdrawal from the U. E.

Fitzgerald Petition

The order, issued on petition of Fitzgerald, restrains the officers from holding the meeting and also from "withdrawing, disposing or expending or disbursing" the local's funds or property and from "interfering with the collective bargaining contract between U.E. and GE."

An affidavit filed with Fitzgerald's petition said the U.E. gerald's petition said the U.E. constitution provides that "disbandment, dissolution, secession or disaffiliation of any local (from U.E.) shall be invalid and null and void if seven or more members indicate a desire to retain the local charter."

RCA Electric Local Goes Over to CIO

Pulaski, Va., Nov. 5 (AP).—After a stormy 2½-hour session here today, Radio Corp. of America plant membership of Local 163 adopted a resolution to oust the United Electrical Radio and Machine Workers as its bargaining agent.

At the same time, the local group voted to recognize the CIO's new organization, the International Union of Radio and Machine Workers, as its sole bargaining agent.

UDC Studies 3 Cities For National HQ

Montgomery, Ala., Nov. 5 (AP). The United Daughters of the Confederacy may establish national headquarters here, Chamber of Commerce officials said today.

Richmond, Va., and Charleston, S. C., also are being considered, it was reported.

Paul Fuller, secretary-manager of the chamber, wired UDC an official invitation to locate their headquarters in Montgomery, first capital of the Confederacy.

Ransom Ruled Out As Kidnap Motive

Utica, N. Y., Nov. 5 (AP).—State police today ruled out ransom and sex motives as they hunted for an infant whose mother said was kidnaped from a bassinette.

Six-week-old Stephen Komorek was snatched from his bed in the family kitchen last night, she said.

"We are working in hopes of finding the child alive," said Inspector E. J. Dougherty.

There has been no trace of the child since the mother, Mrs. Henry Komorek, 29, said she saw a man in dark clothes carry the sleeping babe from their home in nearby Clayville shortly before last midnight.

She said the man, whom she chased in her bare feet, jumped into an automobile and sped off with the infant.

Search Concentrated

Dougherty said the search for the baby was being concentrated in the neighborhood.

Dougherty said the Federal Bureau of Investigation had not been asked to come into the case.

The missing child's father, Henry Komorek, 34, said "we have heard nothing."

Commenting on the possibility of a ransom snatch, Komorek said:

"We haven't got anything. I don't know why this could have been done."

Komorek said he earned about $70 a week as a machine operator until two weeks ago.

Komorek and his wife said they had no known enemies.

Mrs. Komorek told a reporter "the only possibility would be a money angle." She was quoted as saying they had "a new 1949 Pontiac and it had been rumored that we had money."

Inspector Dougherty definitely did not think ransom was the motive.

Checking on "New" People

"We are running down several other angles," he commented. He declined to elaborate other than to say that among other things the police were checking on "new people in the town."

The baby had been suffering with colic and was on a special diet.

Mrs. Komorek said she had fed the baby shortly before 11 p. m. and had put him in his crib.

She told police she then lay down on a couch in the parlor to await her husband's return from work. He was on the 4 p. m.-to-midnight shift.

She said she left the kitchen door unlocked and a few minutes later she heard a rustling in the kitchen. When no one responded to her question, "Who's there?" she investigated and said she saw a man running out with the child.

The Komoreks' only other child, a 7-year-old son, was killed by an automobile four years ago.

Mrs. Mesta Entertains Senate Unit

Luxembourg, Nov. 5 (AP).—Seven United States Senators touring Europe to find facts had this one confirmed today:

Mrs. Perle Mesta, newly appointed United States Minister to the Duchy of Luxembourg, can still throw a party.

She held her first official one last night for the Senators.

The widowed oil heiress, famed in Washington for her gala dinners, even had the Luxembourgers helping to make her first reception a success.

Torches flared and "Marching Through Georgia" blared out as a Luxembourg band trooped through the handsome gardens of the United States Legation. The Yankee ditty brought grins and applause from the Senators, three of whom are from the deep South.

This was only a small part of the busy schedule of parties, tours and serious moments Mrs. Mesta has arranged for the visitors, a subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee, headed by Senator Elmer Thomas (D., Okla.).

When they arrived yesterday they were handed little programs bearing the Grand Ducal Crest, showing a red lion on blue and white stripes. The program was titled "Visit of the Armed Service Subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee."

Included in the tight schedule was a news conference, laying of a wreath on the grave of U. S. Gen. George S. Patton, jr., at the military cemetery of Hamm, lunch in the picturesque Luxembourg countryside and a 55-guest dinner tonight.

At the dinner, the Senators, members of the diplomatic corps and officials were to munch on lobster and—according to the French menu—the "heart" of fillet of beef.

Following the reception last night, Mrs. Mesta led her guests to the golf club for a buffet dinner.

With Senator Thomas are Senators: John McClellan (D., Ark.), A. Willis Robertson (D., Va.), Dennis Chavez (D., N. M.), Burnet R. Maybank (D., S. C.), John C. Stennis (D., Miss.), and Edward J. Thye (R., Minn.). They will go on from Luxembourg to Geneva, Vienna, Athens, Rome, Madrid, Paris and London.

Asked if she wasn't a bit fatigued by all the preparations, Mrs. Mesta replied:

"I like people so much, and when I am with people I am never tired."

Alexander Held For Murder Trial

Herbert D. Alexander, 24, formerly of 3908 Elbert ave., Alexandria, accused of the strangulation murder of his wife and baby in Alexandria in October, 1948, was placed in custody of the city's Corporation Court yesterday to await trial for the slayings.

Alexander was returned to the city late Friday from the Southwest State Hospital at Marion, Va., where he was pronounced sane earlier this week after having been held under observation for about a year. Yesterday he appeared for a commitment hearing before Police Court Judge James R. Duncan, who placed him in custody of Corporation Court officials.

by Garey "for any information leading to her return."

Garey said investigation thus far has developed from two school-girl friends of Lucille that she has been scrimping and saving from her daily allowance of 40 cents for lunch money since the beginning of school in September. The two friends, who also ran away once, Garey said, told him that Lucille had questioned them in detail about methods of inexpensive travel, how to hitch rides, how to "handle" truck drivers, and like information.

He said that Lucille had long been interested in the West and Western activities. As a result, he said, he promised her a trip to a Western dude ranch as a high school graduation present. He is convinced, he said, that she decided she could not wait to travel to the West and took off on her own.

When she left, her mother said, she had $15 in cash, but no spare clothing or luggage. Lucille appears, her parents said, to be at least 16 years old. She was dressed in a red coat, dark green cord skirt and white blouse when she left, they said.

Judge William P. Cole of the United States Customs Court in New York, Lucille's great-uncle, has volunteered to come here to aid in the search, Garey said. Judge Cole was a member of Congress from Maryland for five terms, ending in 1943.

Curb Entry of Natives

Johannesburg, South Africa, Nov. 5 (U.P.).—Officials in 21 towns, including Johannesburg and Pretoria, today invoked the 1945 native restriction act, which regulates the number of natives who can enter the city limits.

Officials said the step was taken to halt the flow of unemployed natives into urban areas.

Football Game Riot Accounts Conceal Blame

Detroit, Nov. 5 (AP).—Conflicting accounts made it impossible today to fix blame in a riot that broke up a high school football game Friday night, police said today.

As a result of the fighting, two persons were in hospitals with serious knife wounds.

More than 1000 fans joined in the melee. It started when a Negro player and a white player began slugging each other on the gridiron.

Afterward, a Negro man and his wife told police they were attacked by about four knife-wielding white youths outside the stadium.

Melvindale police denied there was any racial aspect to the rioting.

Two football players were knocked unconscious in fighting between players in the final minutes of the game.

Passions had risen to fever pitch as Melvindale struggled to overcome a one-touchdown advantage held by its old rival, River Rouge. Both teams were unbeaten.

Mrs. Violet Higgins, 34, a Negro, was in serious condition at Wayne County Hospital with a stab wound in the back. Her husband, Branch, 44, was released pending investigation of felonious assault, Police Lieut. Stanley Machurski said. Jack Lowe, 23, was injured in the back and was hospitalized.

Higgins told police about four white youths pulled him and his wife from their car a block from the stadium after the riot.

The Melvindale team was all white. Their opponents were mixed. The fight was along school lines rather than racial.

Although the game was never completed, River Rouge was awarded a 7-0 victory.

Sabotage Seen In Fireworks for Guy Fawkes Day

London, Nov. 5 (AP).—It's Guy Fawkes day and Britain is having gunpowder alarms.

The British celebrate Guy Fawkes day noisily every fifth of November in memory of the downfall of that guy, who tried to blow up King James and the House of Parliament with 1½ tons of gunpowder back in 1605. He was caught.

This year something is wrong with the fireworks. Instead of going off gently with a shower of pretty sparks, they blow up with enough force to break windows.

The manager of the fireworks factory said he suspected sabotage in his works.

Zolyak, Near Collapse, Claims Body of Wife Slain in Tryst

New York, Nov. 5 (AP).—A sobbing husband, close to collapse, today claimed the body of his estranged wife, slain during a hotel tryst by a Chinese United Nations clerk who then killed himself.

Weeping unrestrainedly, John Zolyak, Washington, D. C., viewed the knife-slashed body of his wife, M[illegible]shana, at Bellevue Morgue. He said he had not seen her since last June 13.

Mrs. Zolyak, 33-year-old Bulgarian-born Voice of America broadcaster, and Wei Huan Kuo, 27, were found slain in a Broadway hotel yesterday. Her nude body bore 23 knife wounds. Kuo, clad only in shorts, had been stabbed six times in the chest.

Police listed the case as murder-suicide.

Zolyak, 38-year-old Government employe, was accompanied here by his sister and brother-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Russell H. Brown of Lancaster, Pa.

No one appeared to claim the body of the Chinese.

A blood-stained hunting knife was found between the two bodies, which lay sprawled, side by side, across the hotel room bed. Police said the knife fitted a sheath in the clerk's jacket.

Notes were found in both Mrs. Zolyak's Riverside dr. home and in Kuo's room at a Y. M. C. A. here.

The note in the woman's room was written by Kuo. It pleaded for a reconciliation and assured her that he would "behave" himself.

The other note threw little or no light on the motive. A single line written by a women, it read:

"We are that way because American men give us everything—everything but love."

Europe Unification Steps Held Urgent

Acheson to Voice Firm Insistence on Economic Union

By Homer Bigart

NYHT News Service

Firm insistence that the countries of western Europe integrate their economies will be voiced by Secretary of State Dean Acheson at Wednesday's meeting of the Big Three foreign ministers in Paris.

Acheson will urge France and Britain to take immediate steps toward economic integration.

He will leave Washington by special plane Monday after a scheduled meeting with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Vishinsky.

The composition of the small Acheson party is clear indication the Secretary wants the talks to focus almost exclusively on European union. Acheson is taking none of his China hands. Paul H. Nitz, chief adviser on economic policy, is in the party. The others are Assistant Secretary George Perkins, in charge of European affairs; Col. Henry A. Byroade, in charge of German and Austrian affairs; Luke Battle, an assistant to the Secretary, and Acheson's private secretary, Barbara Evans.

Reports from London and Paris indicate that Foreign Secretary Bevin of Britain and Foreign Minister Schuman of France believe Germany will be the dominant issue. But the United States may send through Acheson a virtual ultimatum that unless some concrete evidence of progress toward unity is presented before January it will not ask Congress for a third Marshall Plan appropriation.

Bevin and Schuman To Get Message at Paris Wednesday

By Fitzhugh Turner

NYHT News Service

Secretary of State Dean Acheson, according to the best information available in Washington, will carry to Paris with him in the next few days a message of urgency for Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin of Britain and Foreign Minister Robert Schuman of France.

The United States, he is expected to tell his two colleagues in the second Big Three meeting since September, believes the time has come—and may be escaping—for western Europe to take real steps toward unification. And not only the economic integration that Economic Administrator Paul G. Hoffman has been urging, but also integration in its political sense.

This is not to say that Acheson is carrying with him a set of proposals for immediate creation of a United States of Europe. One of the great diplomatic games of the times, according to American sources, is to figure out what can be done in the direction of European integration. The answers are not in hand, nor have they been discussed sufficiently. The United States has no specific proposals.

Seeks to Give Impetus

Nor do the Big Three anticipate reaching any startling conclusions. The approach of the United States will be to discuss possibilities, to set machineries in motion for further discussions and, principally, to give impetus to the movement for integration.

The meeting will follow a session of the committee of ministers of the Council of Europe, the body set up as the principal political agency for European unification. The principal economic agency is the older 19-nation Organization for European Economic Cooperation, a result of the Marshall Plan.

The meeting will begin Wednesday and probably conclude by Wednesday night, although a State Department spokesman said the discussions might "slop over" another day. Acheson must be back in Washington in time to greet the Shah of Iran, Mohammad Reza Pahlevi, who arrives for a state visit November 16.

The United States regards unification as the major reason for the meeting, but the Big Three have other time-consuming problems to discuss as well. Acheson, probably, will be happy if, on the major subject, the session accomplishes only an improvement in European opinion.

Asked why Acheson's sense of urgency, one official answered: "The longer integration takes, we believe, the less likely it is to happen. It gets harder and harder. This is the time to try to get things accomplished."

Romulo Calls For Truce on Atom Bombs

U. S. IS beginning to reexamine its atomic policies after realizing the September 23 announcement of Russian atomic explosion upset old ideas. Post Reporter Alfred Friendly discusses the U. S. dilemma on page one, Section II, today.

By Peter Kihss

Lake Success, No. 5 (NYHT).—U. N. Assembly President Carlos P. Romulo was disclosed here tonight to have asked delegates to the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission to explore possibilities of a "temporary truce" on atomic weapons.

The proposal, transmitted confidentially by letter within the last few days, was received coldly by Western delegations, which took the view that any such ban—unless coupled with tight U. N. controls—would enable any violator to stockpile atomic weapons during the truce period.

Further, it was argued, expiration of the projected truce period, the length of which Romulo didn't specify, would find the U. N., in effect, encouraging an all-out atomic armaments race. This, it was held, would be worse psychologically than the present disagreements.

The United States and other majority powers in the presently suspended commision have been insisting that prohibition of atomic weapons follow establishment of effective U. N. control. Such a control, they contend, would require actual U. N. operation of plants producing fissionable materials—usable for peace, or, in 48 hours' time, for weapons.

Romulo transmitted his proposals Thursday and yesterday, with the observation they might not be feasible, but he believed they should at least be explored. The confidential letter was reported to contain four variations.

One was said to propose a "temporary truce" on making of atomic weapons. If this started from the status quo, the United States would retain its present atomic lead — a situation highly unlikely to win Soviet favor.

The letters included a plea to the delegates to keep the suggestions confidential. But tonight, Romulo made a speech at Indianapolis, before the English Speaking Union, on the same idea.

He said: "I am consulting with the representatives of the governments concerned in order to bring about at least a temporary truce, if not a permanent settlement of these questions.

"I have proceeded on the assumption that what we need above all is relaxation of the international tension—a breathing spell during which we could reorganize our thinking and pull ourselves together for what may well prove to be the last supreme effort of mankind to establish an enduring peace."

He declared that "our immediate objective is to promote a political truce, more specifically to call a temporary halt on the deadly atomic armaments race."

"The short-term proposal I have made amounts, in effect, to the application of an emergency brake," Romulo said, "after we have brought the engine of war to a halt, we shall then have all the time we need to initiate a long-range program for the establishment of permanent peace . . . or to continue such portions of it as already have been started by the United Nations and its various instrumentalities."

Romulo's intervention came while the French and Canadian delegations, backing the majority plan, were preparing a resolution for discussion by the special political committee Monday.

The draft resolution would have the Assembly urge continuance of talks among the Big Five powers and Canada in an effort to find atomic agreement and appeal to all nations to cooperate.

Portraits Hint Red Politburo Drops Deputy

Moscow, Nov. 5 (AP).—Portraits of the Politburo used as decorations for the thirty-second anniversary Monday of the Bolshevist Revolution show only 11 members, instead of the dozen displayed in Russia's May Day celebration

That of L. M. Kaganovich, a deputy president of the Council of Ministers, is missing. Prime Minister Stalin, at the center, is flanked by V. M. Molotov, former Foreign Minister, and Georgi M. Malenkov, other deputy presidents.

(The absence of Kaganovich's

(The absence of Kagonovich's portrait indicates he has been dropped from the Politburo, the political bureau of the Central Committee of the All Union Communist Party. A big, broad-shouldered man who was Commissar of Heavy Industry for many years, he has been the only Jew on the Politburo. His name has not been mentioned in dispatches from Moscow recently.)

Officials completed preparations tonight for celebration of the anniversary of the revolution, Russia's most important holday.

Citizens awaited a speech Sunday night by some Soviet leader, his name not yet disclosed, who will review the accomplishments of the past year and sound the keynote for the coming year of the Communist regime.

Reds Insist Communism, Capitalism Can Coexist

Moscow, Nov. 5 (U.P.).—The magazine Bolshevik, most authoritative organ of the Communist world, insisted again today the Soviet Union believes capitalism and communism can exist side by side without armed clashes.

Bolshevik, issued twice a month, is the official publication of the Soviet Union's Central Committee of the Communist Party. The views were in an editorial marking the thirty-second anniversary of the Russian Revolution November 7.

At the same time, Bolshevik said recent Communist "triumphs" in Germany and China meant capitalism must inevitably disappear—that "all roads lead to communism in this contemporary epoch."

Behind the Curtain

Russian's Lot Has Improved Since 1947, but Remains Low

(Fourth in a series)

By Joseph Newman

Paris, Nov. 5 (NYHT).—Living conditions of the Soviet worker improved slightly after rationing was abolished at the end of 1947. The reduction in prices was not as great as had been expected and the standard of living remains very low.

Some basic foodstuffs were reduced slightly but the cost of clothing and manufactured goods was increased from 20 to 100 percent above the previous ration level. The cost of a suit of clothes, 800 rubles under the ration system, was increased to 1400 rubles under the new, unrationed schedule. Nevertheless, the worker, with an average monthly wage estimated between 550 and 730 rubles, was better off than before.

He previously had not been able to get everything to which he was entitled on his ration card. Now there are greater quantities of foodstuffs, clothing and manufactured goods, which are flowing into Russian from the newly absorbed Baltic states and the eastern European countries.

Peasant Not So Well Off

The peasant, who accounts for more than half of the laboring population, is not so well off. The reduction in food prices meant that he received less for the things he carried to the open market while the cost of manufactured goods continued to be extremely high. Furthermore, he is under constant pressure to reduce his private garden, on which he depends to supplement his slender share from the collective farm. Taxes on his income from his private plot of land have been increased.

The ones who profited most by derationing were those in the upper class—army officers, bureaucrats, industrial engineers, executives and high-paid artists and writers.

Whereas the worker had to limit himself to rationed goods at lower prices, the upper class had been able to buy unlimited quantities at extremely high "commercial" prices (3000 rubles for a suit and more than 1000 rubles for a pair of shoes). When this dual price system was abolished at the end of 1947, the new single-price scale was fixed between the two different levels, and the upper class now pays much less for the goods which it previously bought at the very high "commercial" prices.

Official Statements Puzzling

The working class is not as well off as before the war. This would not be difficult to understand were it not for statements by Soviet officials that Russia had recovered its prewar production levels in industry and agriculture and that the purchasing power of the ruble had been doubled.

The worker must pay about 150 per cent more for the essential goods he consumes than he did before the war in 1940, while his wages have been increased only 80 per cent.

In 1940 the worker paid .85 ruble for a kilogram of black bread, but he now must pay 2.70 rubles. He paid 28 rubles for a kilogram of butter for which he must now pay 57.60 rubles. He could buy a kilogram of beef for 9 rubles before, but he now pays exactly three times that much. As a result the Soviet worker with a wife and child cannot manage on his wages alone.

Take the case of Ivan Ivanovich Ivanov, an average industrial worker who earns about 730 rubles monthly. His take-home pay amounts to 626.80 rubles after deductions.

Tax On Income

He must pay a monthly income tax of 43.60 rubles and an additional tax of 7.30 rubles as a penalty for having but one child; the monthly installment on his annual government bond comes to 45 rubles (purchase is theoretically voluntary, but Ivan knows he might be considered disloyal and he wants no trouble); trade union dues are 7.30 rubles.

Ivan Ivanovich pays 33 rubles monthly rent for a single room of 25 square meters. He is much more fortunate than most Muscovites who have but 5 square meters each though they are legally entitled to 9. The shortage of housing is so great that it is not unusual for at least two families to share a single room.

His government is proud that he pays such little rent and often advertises this to the outside world. Ivan, too, is happy the rent is so low because if it were much higher he would have to eat less and fall below his current subsistence level.

His electricity allowance of 600 wats daily costs 4.50 rubles monthly. If he exceeds the ration, the cost is tripled, and if he repeatedly exceeds it, the entire supply is cut off.

Satisfied With Food

The Ivanovs share kitchen and bathroom with three other families, and pay 6.90 rubles per month. The total for rent, electricity, cooking and heating is about 56 rubles monthly.

Like most of their countrymen, the Ivanovs subsist largely on black bread, as much as two kilograms daily. They have liberal quantities of cabbage (usually in soups), potatoes, some carrots and beet roots, some sausage, tea and limited quantities of sugar. They use very little fresh meat, fish and butter, which are too expensive.

To sustain his family with this limited yet filling diet, Ivan must spend about 500 rubles monthly. The family is quite content with its food. It has served the Russians for centuries.

After paying food and household expenses, Ivan has only 71 rubles left. He has still to pay his daily subway fare, more than 20 rubles monthly. There is practically no money left for clothing and other essentials. His wife, Maria, must work to make ends meet.

Her government has made a great point in proclaiming that Soviet women have equal opportunities to work. Maria and the majority of married women in the Soviet Union are in a position which virtually compels them to accept these opportunities in all fields of work, including heavy labor.

British Trucker Says Water-Filled Tires Excellent

Liverpool, England, Nov. 5 (AP). The trucks of a cartage firm here are rolling on water instead of air.

T. Beard, the firm's chief engineer, said he began experimenting with water-filled tires a year ago and "the results are excellent."

Beard said this combats wheel spinning and skidding, cuts down tire wear and improves braking on the firm's 70 heavy trucks.

He fills each back tire with 20 gallons of water and adds calcium chloride as an antifreeze.

In Akron, Ohio, center of the United States rubber industry, one source said the United States industry has tried and abandoned water-filled tires because they lack resiliency and result in a hard ride.

It is the practice in this country to fill some farm equipment tires with water in order to gain more traction through added weight.

Ethiopia Hits Italy Claims On Colonies

Lake Success, N. Y., Nov. 5 (U.P.). Ethiopia complained to the United Nations today that its national security would be subjected to the "most terrible of threats" if the U. N. granted Italian demands in settling the fate of Italy's former East African colonies.

Italy replied it had no intention of using these former colonies—Somaliland and Eritrea—as springboards for aggression against Ethiopia.

Italy's American Ambassador, Alberto Tarchiani, said the Rome government would try to develop the friendliest possible relations with Emperor Haile Selassie's regime.

The exchange took place as the General Assembly's top political committee tried to find a solution to the complex Italian colonies problem.

Reds Report Atom Moving Mountains

Berlin, Nov. 5 (U.P.).—The Soviet-licensed newspaper Nacht Express said tonight the Russians had used atomic energy to blow up mountains in Siberia to reverse the direction of two rivers.

The newspaper said the disclosure was made by a Soviet engineer named Davydov in a statement before the Moscow Energy Institute.

"Atomic energy was used for the first time in the history of humanity for peaceful purposes in the execution of an overwhelmingly great project, which provides for reversing the directions of the Siberian Ob and Jenissei rivers," Nacht Express said.

"Rock barriers of the Ural and Caucasus Mountains were blasted through application of atomic energy." The Ural Mountains divide European Russia from Siberia; the Caucasus range is in southwest Russia near Turkey.

(Study of the map of the USSR seems to indicate that Nacht Express was in error in naming the mountain barrier the Caucasian Mountains and that it should be the Kazakhstan Mountains. Turgai is in the Kazakh SSR about 500 miles northeast of the reclamation area.)

Commenting on Davydov's statement, the newspaper said "the world now has an explanation of what the official Soviet statement on September 25 of this year said on the atomic explosion in the USSR."

It said a plan drawn up by Davydov called for watering the plains between the Caspian Sea and the Aral Sea in order to turn 75 million acres into fertile land and provide waterpower for the production of 82 trillion watt hours of electric energy yearly.

"The main difficulty in carrying out the project—which is already being worked on with great effort—was the blasting of the gap for the new river bed at the Turgai Gate between the rocks of the Ural and Caucasus Mountains," the newspaper said.

"Davydov's plan provides in addition for the creation of a new river bed 3000 miles long stretching from the Ob River dam near Belogorsk to the Caspian Sea.

"This plan, which completely chances areas the size of France, will convert within a few years the Kara-Kum desert and the Siberian plains into flourishing gardens and valleys

The September 25 statement referred to by Nacht Express said Russia had the atomic bomb secret in 1947 and that it then "had at its disposal this weapon."

Large-Scale Building

The official Soviet news agency Tass said "in the Soviet Union, as is known, building work on a large scale is in progress. Building of hydro-electric stations, mines, canals, roads, which evoke the necessity of large-scale blasting work with the use of the latest technical means.

"Insofar as this blasting work has taken place and is taking place pretty frequently in various parts of the country, it is possible that this might draw attention beyond the confines of the Soviet Union."

Yugoslav Group Seeks New Friends

By John G. Rogers

Lake Success, Nov. 5 (NYHT).—The current session of the United Nations General Assembly has produced one matter of daily interest—the conduct of the Yugoslav delegates since their country popped out from behind the Iron Curtain.

In past years Yugoslav delegates generally were faithful to the Soviet line in all debate and voting. Usually it was only in a nominal sense that they were accessible to reporters. You could say "hello" to them and they might answer a question, providing this could be done by parroting the Moscow party line.

Now it is all different. The Yugoslavs are frankly and openly out to make new friends in the West. They have a drink with the West. They tell a joke to the West. They stop and chat. They are eager to be interviewed and actually encourage embarrassing questions, even when their replies must include admission of past error.

Seek New Friends

It is only natural and practical that the Yugoslavs are looking for new friends. In the corridors and lounges at Lake Success, the Russians and other Communists won't even speak to the Yugoslavs, so deep is Soviet enmity.

Russian newspapermen at Lake Success do not speak to the representative of Tanjug, the Yugoslav news agency.

The key to the new Yugoslav attitude is fear of Russia, fear of Soviet attack, either directly or by maneuver through bordering Russian satellites. It was this fear that inspired the Yugoslavs to carry out as slick a political campaign as the U.N. has yet seen in order to win election to the Security Council over Russian-favored Czechoslovakia.

Since the election, the Yugoslavs have been in high spirits. They feel that Russia won't dare move physically against a nation just elected to the Security Council.

Recently, an American newspaperman asked a Yugoslav delegate: "Today you accuse Russia of being aggressive and imperialistic, having no respect for the rights of small countries. Didn't you perceive any of those Russian qualities when you were a standard Russian satellite?"

Admit Blindness

The reply was: We admit we once followed the Soviet Union blindly. We are in the same geographical region and we both are Communist states. She is big and we are small. We thought she was an honest protector and respecter of the small countries in her neighborhood. But we found out that we were wrong. You have to play 100 percent her way, or she doesn't want you to play at all.

While the Yugoslavs are afraid of Russia, they are not afraid of Russians. It took courage for them to break with Moscow. They are justifiably proud of their action and are conscious there is something historic in the present status.

Not a day goes by without sharp exchanges between Russians and Yugoslavs. The Yugoslav delegates now never miss a chance to tell the Russians what they think of them. And the Russians pay the Yugoslavs the high compliment of using on them the same sort of invectives that they formerly saved for the United States and Britain.

Gardener Uses Shovel on Tigress, Saves Zoo Keeper

Glasgow, Scotland, Nov. 5. (U.P.)—A 60-year-old gradner armed only with a shovel, today drove off an an enraged tigress and saved the life of the head keeper of the Calder Park Zoo.

The keeper, S. H. Benson, was attacked by Sheila, the zoo's only tigress, when he entered her cage under the impression that it was empty.

Gardener Alec Innes saw Benson's plight and rushed to his aid. He beat the tigress on the head with his shovel until she fled into the zoo grounds.

The jungle cast was cornered and shot only 10 yards from the zoo's tea shop.

Go to Chicago 4-H Meeting

Patricia Lynch

Douglas King

Pearl King

Three Montgomery County farm youngsters are among 24 selected in the State to attend the 1949 National 4-H Club Congress in Chicago, November 27 to December 2.

They are Pearl King, 16, of Woodfield; Patricia Lynch, 17, of Gaithersburg, and Douglas King, 20, of Clarksburg.

Pearl, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ollie King and one of nine children, has participated in 4-H work for five years. Chosen for her achievements in food preparation, she has amassed a record of more than 3500 meals prepared for her family during that period.

Patricia, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Lynch, has prepared more than 120 garments during her five-year period of club work. She was selected for her proficiency in clothing projects.

Attendance at national farm youth meetings is nothing new to Douglas, son of Mr. and Mrs. Leslie C. King. He has participated in the National Livestock Judging Contest in Chicago, National Vegetable Judging Contest, Jackson, Miss., and the Future Farmers of America Poultry Judging Contest at Springfield, Mass. He was selected for his gardening ability. He harvested this year a $1120 vegetable crop.

Can Ex-Nazi Play Christ?

Frankfurt, Nov. 5 (AP).—Should a former Nazi act the part of Christ in the world-famous Oberammergau Passion Play next year?

The 4000 natives of the snow-decked village tucked amid the Bavarian Alps debated this question today with brotherly but heated fervor. Next Tuesday, an election committee of native Oberammergau villagers will make the decision.

Alois Lang, 56-year-old former Nazi sympathizer, and three younger men are up for consideration, but the choice for the leading role in the great religious drama may depend more on the acting ability and endurance of the rivals than on their political record.

The selection of the cast of 102 performers and almost 4000 secondary parts for the tragedy of Christ's trial and crucifixion will take two days.

Rehearsals will start soon after for the 1950 performance of the play, which attracts thousands of visitors from all over the world.

The performance, falling in Holy Year, is the first since 1934.

The Passion Play dates from 1633 when, an old chronicle says, the village of Oberammergau was stricken by the plague. Eighty-four of the village's 600 inhabitants went to their graves.

The village elders swore to perform the tragedy of the passion every 10 years.

The pledge has been carried out for 300 years, with only two interruptions—the First and Second World wars.

Alois Lang, a wood-carver and hotel proprietor, played the role of Christ in 1934.

His rivals are three young men, Hans Lang, Hugo Rutz and Benedikt Stueckl. The Virgin Mary is likely to be played by 19-year-old Annemie Mayer, daughter of a builder.

At his trial Lang said he joined the Nazi Party to avoid persecution and financial ruin because a woman reported him for a minor violation of regulations in the sale of a cup of coffee.

The Passion Play is expected to open on May 21. It lasts eight hours.

U. N. Falters, Presbyterians Told by Judd

Atlanta, Nov. 5 (AP).—World unity and lasting peace can be achieved only when Christians begin striving as individuals toward that end, Presbyterian laymen were told today.

"There would be no hope if it depended on political solution," declared Representative Walter H. Judd (R., Minn.).

Judd, a former Congregationalist missionary to China, said three world organizations are at work today—the United Nations, the Communist Party and the Christian church.

U. N. Faltering

"The United Nations is faltering," he asserted, "because it is trying to work under two sets of principles: one for the Big Five and another for the other 53 countries.'

"Russia has its own world organization, well-organized, disciplined and fanatical. The Communists are working under one set of rules toward one goal.

"And at the same time, Russia sits in the United Nations and is in position to thwart efforts toward world unity."

The Christian church alone can deefat the threat of communism, he asserted.

The three-day Presbyterian men's convention, which ends Sunday, was designed to show laymen what the church is doing and how they as individuals can advance the church's program. Some 4000 elders, deacons and "just plain floor members" from 17 Southern states are attending.

Race Prejudice Hit

Dr. William M. Elliott, jr., pastor of the Highland Park Presbyterian Church, Dallas, Tex., deplored liquor, divorce and race prejudice as three great problems which in the end must come to the individual for solution.

"Race prejudice is about the uglist and most inexcusable thing I know of," he asserted, "yet so many of us are guilty of it. As Christians we are less concerned about this great social problem all over the world then unbelievers. We will make no progress until you and I start thinking more like Christians. Begin with yourself."

Deputy Undersecretary of State Dean Rusk, defending the work of U. N., asserted.

"The record will show that, by and large, men of good will are getting on with the job. War devastation is being repaired, health is rising, more stomachs are being fed, disputes are being settled by peaceful means, local fighting is being smothered by the many processes of peace."

Czech Bishops Fail in Effort To Get Laws on Church Eased

Prague, Czechoslovakia, Nov. 5 (AP).—Roman Catholic bishops disclosed today they have sought—without success—to get revision of government controls that they charged virtually outlaw the church.

In a memorandum handed to the government October 21, the churchmen asked for immediate changes in the decrees on the ground they put the church "outside the legal pale."

The government made no reply to the note, which was released to the Western press for the first time today.

The law went into effect, on schedule, November 1, despite the protest. Under it, a cabinet ministry was formed to supervise church affairs. Priests and pastors became civil servants, paid by the state. All churchmen were required to swear an oath of allegiance to the Czech republic and the Communist-controlled people's democratic regime.

Beran's Name Missing

Ten bishops and the apostolic administrator signed the memorandum, which invoked Czechoslovakia's constitutional freedom of expression clause. Missing from it was the name of Archbishop Josef Beran, the Czech primate, who says he has been interned in his palace since June 19.

The bishops charged the new law "ceases to respect the autonomy which until now was granted the church to direct independently, within the limits of the laws, matters of faith, morals, church service, discipline, religious education and membership in the church."

It said the constitutionally guaranteed freedom of religious activity was not insured.

"On the contrary," it went on, "the carrying out of religious conviction resulting from membership in the church is in danger of being made impossible or being violated on purely political grounds."

The bishops said decrees accompanying the law, which were arrived at without negotiation with the church, were worse than the law itself.

Called 'Unworkable'

"Some of these decrees show themselves practically, even with the best of will, to be unworkable," they said.

The memorandum ended by asking the government to "insure the Roman Catholic Church a firm legal standing and an equally independent activity in the internal matters of the church."

Last week, the bishops gave their priests permission to obey the provision of the law in order to stay out of jail—a retreat from their former stand. They even told them to swear the oath of allegiance—with reservations. The bishops said they themselves, however, would not accept the government salaries they authorized the priests to accept.

About 300 priests had been jailed for their opposition to the laws, church sources have said. Subsequently, 127 were released.

Eastern States Get Foretaste of Winter

November's traditional gray skies and nippy temperatures brought a foretaste of winter to the Eastern States Saturday.

Snow flurries were reported in the Appalachians and a light snow fell in northern New England. Fair weather prevailed over much of the rest of the country, except for light rain along the mid-Atlantic Coast.

Czech Reds Hang Six in 'Revolt' Plot

Prague, Czechoslovakia, Nov. 5 (U.P.).—The Communist government today hanged six alleged leaders of a revolt which was supposed to have actually gotten under way last spring, the official press agency announced.

The press agency said the Brno supreme court rejected their appeals for clemency and all six paid with their lives this morning.

Described as the most dangerous plot against the government since the Communists took control in February, 1948, it allegedly involved Boy and Girl Scout leaders and even penetrated into the state's secret security police.

Those hanged were:

Former army major Kvetoslav Prokes, about 56, who served in Britain during the war.

Josef Charvat, relative of the chief of the Prague security police, B. Charvat, and himself a member of the secret police.

Dr. Jaroslav Borkovec, lawyer and former policeman.

Emanuel Cancik, allegedly the link between the plotters inside Czechoslovakia and refugees outside the border.

Vratislav Janda and Vraislav Polesny, both of whom were obscure.

First disclosure of the alleged insurrection was August 30, although it said the plot was smashed last spring. More than 200 were arrested, the announcement indicated, and stood trial in secret courts between July 25 and August 22.

According to the agency, the "revolutionists" had collected arms, planned to seize certain key spots, remove certain officials "by violence," decree martial law, disperse the national assembly, disband the security police, close newspapers and return nationalized factories to former owners.

British to Federate Their West Indies

London, Nov. 5 (AP). — Britain plans to set up a new, near-independent state between the two Americas — A West Indian federation of six Caribbean colonies and nearly 3 million people.

The blueprint for this long-dreamed-of state is soon to be published by Colonial Secretary Arthur Creech Jones. It will then be debated by each of the colonies concerned.

The blueprint has been designed by a "closer association" committee of West Indians from each territory, working for two years.

Meet in Barbados

West Indian colonial governors meet in Bridgetown, Barbados, on Monday to discuss the report. Lord Listowel, Minister for Colonies, has flown to the Caribbean for the talks.

According to responsible informants, the committee report urges federation of Barbados, British Honduras, Jamaica, the Leeward Islands, Trinidad and the Windward Islands into a single state.

It wants the federation to have full internal self-government, just short of that of a dominion like Canada.

On matters except defense, some financial questions and foreign affairs, the new state would be virtually free.

American-based military bases in the West Indies would remain unaffected.

Britain thinks a community well over 2,500,000 strong in the Caribbean can hope to play a part as a nation in world affairs.

The West Indies, guarding the western sea approaches to the Panama Canal, have a strategic role in American military planning.

Hard-pressed Britain in 1940 granted 99-year leases on certain of the islands to the United States for military and naval aid. In return, the United States turned over 50 old destroyers.

The "closer association" committee's report calls for a government composed of a British-appointed governor general topping a federal cabinet and parliament. Each colony would retain its own "home" legislature to run local affairs.

War 'Inevitable'

Ukrainians Urged to Toil For Liberty

More than 400 persons of Ukrainian descent were urged yesterday to work through both official and underground channels toward an independent Ukraine, free of its present Soviet masters.

They were the delegates to the fourth Congress of Americans of Ukrainian Descent, meeting yesterday and today at the Statler Hotel, under the sponsorship of the Ukrainian Congress Committee of America.

Dr. Michael Vetukhiv, a former professor at Kharkov University, Ukraine, told of the loss of freedoms in his country under Soviet Russia, and urged support of the underground Ukrainian Insurgent Army, which he said is still fighting against Soviet troops.

Fears World War III

Dr. Lev Dobriansky, assistant professor of economics at Georgetown University, told the Congress that people of Ukrainian descent must impress on American officials "the value of the Ukrainian people as a tested and dependable ally of the United States."

Both Dr. Vetukhiv and Dr. Dobriansky discarded the idea of peaceful containment of Soviet Russia, Dr. Dobriansky declaring that World War III is inevitable "in terms of the world picture today."

A message from President Truman, read by Dr. John Panchuk of Detroit, cochairman of the congress, was greeted with an ovation. The President congratulated the Ukrainian group on their participation in American democracy and for their efforts to aid their kinsmen overseas, who, he said, "are not able to listen to a free radio or read an uncensored press."

Pledge to Fight Aggression

A telegram was sent to the President pledging full support in resisting totalitarian aggression.

Undersecretary of State Herbert A. Fierst spoke briefly on American policy toward dispossessed persons, and Edward J. Shaughnessy, director of the Immigration and Naturalization Service for the New York district, urged the group to let their kinsmen behind the Iron Curtain know the truth about this country.

Other speakers yesterday were Senator H. Alexander Smith of New Jersey; Dr. Luke Myshuka, editor of the Jersey City Ukrainian-language daily, Svohoda; Dr. Nicholas Chubaty, editor of the Ukrainian Quarterly of New York, and Miss Ludmilla Ivchenko of Philadelphia, who discussed Soviet education of the Ukrainian youth.

Since Devaluation

Argentines Ease Ban On Imports

Buenos Aires, Nov. 5 (AP).—Argentina today announced it would permit imports for first time since September 17.

No import permits have been issued since Britain devalued the pound. After a study of almost three weeks Argentina devalued the peso 46 percent. During the past 51 days the only imports were those approved before mid-September.

The first set of rules, published late today, were designed to insure that Argentines would buy from countries that buy from Argentina.

Fourteen closely typed pages listed so-called essentials that can be bought from Britain and elsewhere in the sterling area.

A much briefer list, covering only five pages, gave essentials that can be imported from Bulgaria, Hungary, Italy, Sweden, Yugoslavia and the French franc area.

U. S. Demands Chinese Communists Liberate Five Mukden Consular Aides

By the United Press

The United tates has demanded that the highest Chinese Communist authorities help free five arrested members of the United States consulate in Mukden, it was disclosed yesterday.

State Department officials said O. Edmund Clubb, United States Consul General in Peiping, has made the representations to Gen. Chou En-lai, Foreign Minister of the Chinese Communist regime.

Clubb, in a letter left for Chou on Thursday, asked that the arrested men be freed and the entire consulate staff be allowed to leave China as the Communists had promised July 24. Clubb left the letter for Chou after he tried unsuccessfully for four days to get a personal appointment with a Communist official.

Clubb was seeking freedom for Angus Ward, American consul at Mukden, and four of his staff who were arrested October 24 on charges that they beat up a Chinese employe seeking back pay.

The only message received from the Mukden consulate arrived a week ago and reported simply that the five consulate members had been arrested "for a few days."

Further consulate messages about the case apparently have been stopped by Communists who control communications the Americans must use.

Chinese Red Armies Threaten Chungking

Hongkong, Nov. 5 (U.P.)—Communist armies have rolled into Kweichow Province south of Chungking in a new threat to the Nationalist refugee capital, dispatches from Chungking said today.

The reports said the Red armies were 100 miles from Kweiyang, Kweichow capital, 210 miles due south of Chungking.

Capture of Kweiyang would split Nationalist forces and isolate the troops of Gen. Pai Chung-hsi.

Filipinos to Choose President Tuesday

By Spencer Davis

Manila, Nov. 5 (AP).—The young Philippines Republic will elect a President Tuesday after a campaign in which the United States has been both an issue and an influence.

Here are the three candidates, one of whom will serve four years as the second elected President of the republic:

President Elpidio Quirino, Liberal Party leader who came to power 18 months ago upon the unexpected death of Manuel Roxas, the first president of the republic. Quirino makes much of United States friendship. Most observers give him an edge.

Jose P. Laurel, Nacionalista Party candidate, puppet president under the Japanese, who is supported by Filipino Communists whether he likes it or not. He objects to what he calls American back-seat driving. He is rated a strong second.

Jose Avelino, a Liberal Party boss who broke with Quirino. Quirino had him ousted from the senate presidency last spring and precipated a deep split within the dominant Liberal Party.

Eighty percent of the 5,156,363 registered Filipinos are expected to vote.

Also to be elected are eight senators and 98 house members. With the Liberal Party split, it will be hard for any president to hold a majority through the next four years. There are other headaches. Money from the United States for rehabilitation will run out in 18 months. That will precipitate an economic crisis.

Quirino has contended that only he could insure continued United States aid. Laurel has answered that the Philippines must learn to be more self-reliant and that United States aid would be better spent under him because he would eliminate graft and corruption which he said have plagued Quirino's administration.

President Truman unexpectedly provided a major break in the campaign wtih his announcement October 27 that the United States would remain friendly to the Philippines no matter who was elected.

Truman's Remark Aided Laurel

It has been estimated this statement gave Laurel a boost of perhaps 100,000 votes.

Adjustments in the United States-Philippine trade agreement and military bases agreement as well as a treaty of friendship and commerce have been under negotiations for a year. A change in leadership would put a new team to work on the above treaties, which Laurel says have circumscribed Philippine independence.

Nn leftist himself, Laurel says Communists support him as the lesser of two evils.

Laurel warned the government that Filipinos had the right to revolt if they could not express their wishes freely at an election.

This backfire into an alleged sedition-plot on Negro Island involving a score of the Philippine constabulary's crack soldiers and a Nacionalista Party candidate for the senate.

Gov. Rafael Lachon of Negro has placed special police at strategic points of entry in every township.

The Nacionalistas undoubtedly will protest the election returns from this province. These returns could be decisive.

So Tuesday's election, beginning at the voting booth, may end in the courts.

Hiss Counsel Acts

Chambers' Trip Outside U.S. Hinted

New York, Nov. 5 (NYHT).—Evidence that a hitherto undisclosed trip outside the United States may have been made between 1930 and 1939 by Whittaker Chambers, chief prosecution witness in the perjury trial of Alger Hiss, turned up today in pretrial motion papers filed in United States District Court.

The affidavit by Claude B. Cross, attorney for Hiss, disclosed that he had asked the State Deaartment to search for passport applications by Chambers under his own name or any of several aliases. A reply from Mrs. Ruth B. Shipley, chief of the passport division, stated that she had found "one application pertaining to the subject of your inquiry." Mrs. Shipley did not specify the date of the application, the name used, nor whether Chambers actually used the passport.

Motion Up Monday

Judge Edward A. Conger signed an order last Tuesday directing the State Department to produce the application, and assistant United States Attorney Thomas F. Murphy countered on Friday with a motion to quash the order. The motion will be argued Monday at 10:30 a. m.

Hiss's second trial is scheduled to begin November 17, the first having ended in a hung jury. Hiss was accused by Chambers of supplying him with secret Government documents for transmission to a Communist spy ring in 1938. He was indicted for perjury when he denied the charge.

A defense motion to inspect samples of the handwriting and typewriting of Whittaker Chambers and his wife, Esther—indicating that the defense may seek to prove in the second trial that Chambers or Mrs. Chambers typed the documents which he accused Hiss or Mrs. Hiss of typing—will also be argued Monday morning. The motion also asks permission for the defense to examine the paper on which the documents were typed, to determine whether they were typed in 1938, as Chambers claimed, or later; and to submit other typewriting samples to defense experts.

Typewriter's Identity

The identity of the typewriter on which the spy documents were typed was a central point in the first trial, but the identity of the person who typed them was not brought out by evidence from either side, apart from Chambers' original accusation.

Judge Conger signed an order today directing the Immigration and Naturalization Service to produce all records of visa applications made by Mrs. Hedi Massing, first wife of Gerhard Eisler, for inspection by the defense. The prosecution sought to call Mrs. Massing as a witness in the first trial, but Judge Samuel H. Kaufman ruled that her testimony was not material.

McCormick Is Named Vice Chief of the Navy

By The Associated Press

Admiral Forrest P. Sherman yesterday made the first major personnel move since he became Chief of Naval Operations last Wednesday.

He chose Rear Admiral Lynde Dupuy McCormick, commander of the Twelfth Naval District at San Francisco, to be his Vice Chief of Naval Operations, effective next spring.

At different times during the war, Sherman and McCormick were chiefs of staff to Fleet Admiral Chester W. Nimitz, commander in chief of the Pacific Fleet.

McCormick is a submarine man; Sherman an aviator.

Sherman said that continuing rumors that Admiral Arthur W. Radford will be replaced as the present Pacific Fleet commander are "all speculation" with no basis in fact that he knows about.

Sherman said, too, he knows nothing of reports that Admiral Louis E. Denfeld, whom he succeeded as Chief of Naval Operations, now may retire.

He said he knows that Admiral Richard L. Conolly, Eastern Atlantic-Mediterranean commander, has no intention of retiring.

But one top admiral who it is understood may retire because he has just about reached retirement age, is Admiral Thomas C. Kinkaid, commander of the Eastern Sea Frontier.

In the row over present defense planning, it was Radford who was the first of a string of admirals to go before the House Armed Services Committee to claim the Navy was being slighted. Among the admirals lining up with him were Denfeld, Kinkaid and Conolly.

The ousting of Denfeld and his replacement by Sherman came as a climax to the uproar over Pentagon policies.

In moving up to the job of Vice Chief of Naval Operations, McCormick also will become a vice admiral. He will replace Vice Admiral John D. Prince, who will become commander of naval air training with headquarters at Pensacola, Florida.

The present air training commander is Vice Admiral John W. Reeves, jr., who expects to retire in April.

Annapolis Quota for AF Boosted

By the United Press

The Navy struck what observers viewed as a blow for unification with disclosure yesterday that it is tripling the number of Annapolis graduates who may transfer to the Air Force next year.

Military circles viewed the announcement as an important step toward closing the Navy-Air Force breach opened during the recent unification hearings in Congress.

The new arrangement will permit 25 percent of the 690-man graduating class at the U. S. Naval Academy to volunteer for transfer to the Air Force, which has no academy of its own.

It supercedes an arrangement under which only 7 percent of Annapolis graduates could switch to the Air Force.

Under an agreement with the Army, the Air Force gets 40 percent of the graduates from the Military Academy at West Point. A new arrangement is expected soon which will give the Air Force a bigger share.

Meanwhile, the Navy reported that its Navy and Marine Corps reserve squadrons at 27 stations throughout the country flew a record-breaking 394,000 pilot flying hours in 1949 cruises. This compared with 302,000 pilot hours flown in the 1948 program.

Talent Shown By Vaughan

vors for John Maragon and others, his oil color should "excel a Rembrandt."

Other committee members, irked by what they termed the general's "slur" on Congress, reminded him that he might be recalled next year for further questioning by the "pumpkinheads."

The President's military aide, whose roles in transactions involving deepfreezers, race tracks, perfume and molasses among other things were disclosed by the committee, dashed off the painting for a benefit exhibit of the Urban League to be shown at the Associated American Artists Galleries in New York.

While members of the Senate subcommittee are not named or identified in the painting, its implication is clear.

Titled "The Path of Investigation," it shows a road leading off to the horizon where clouds and a question mark hang in the sky. Beside the road is a desk behind which are two figures having pumpkins for heads.

The general, while working on the painting several weeks ago, was said to have told White House associates that he meant the pumpkinheads to represent Senators McCarthy and Karl E. Mundt (R., S. Dak.), who did most of the questioning when he was on the witness stand.

He was also reported to have said that the clouds stood for the "cloudy thinking" of the committee and the question mark for the "questionable results" of the five percenter investigation.

It could not be learned yesterday whether General Vaughan had shown the painting to President Truman, who also has belittled the investigation and indicated that he could see no wrong in the general's frequent intervention with Government agencies to do favors for Maragon and others.

Senator Mundt saw in General Vaughan's canvas another attempt by the White House to flaunt the investigating power of Congress.

"I am surprised that the general wants to remind people of the committee's hearings," he said. "He wouldn't be trying to laugh them off if he could hear some of the comments of people out here, who were thoroughly disgusted by his ethics and their approval by the President."

Senator Mundt also suggested that General Vaughan might be "a bit premature" in setting himself up as a judge of the committee.

"There is a considerable question whether these hearings are all over," he said.

Army Reveals Striking Arm

Chief of Staff, who with Army Secretary Gordon Gray came to Fort Benning to attend the demonstrations, sought to clear up what he said might have been misunderstanding about an earlier comment on strategic bombing by the Air Force.

Collins recalled that in a talk at Washington earlier this week he said no aircraft of today could wage intercontinental warfare on a sound basis.

Reporters, remembering the Air Forces designation of the B-36 as an intercontinental bomber, asked the Army Chief of Staff what his comment meant.

"The only point I am making," said Collins, "is that you can't wage intercontinental warfare on a large scale without immediate bases."

Collins hastened to add that if Gen. Hoyt Vandenberg, Air Force Chief of Staff, and Air Secretary W. Stuart Symington "say the B-36 can bomb bases on other continents and return to North America, I accept their word for it."

Johnson Urges Development Of U. S. Arms

Indianapolis, Nov. 5 (U.P.).—Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson in a frank statement on strategy said tonight that the United States and its allies may never again have superiority in numbers in war.

He said the Nation must compensate for the loss by technical skill, superior weapons, and "full and intelligent use of the manpower we do have."

Johnson outlined his military thinking to a meeting of the American Legion national executive committee.

He did not mention Russia by name, but he said:

"Our weapons must be developed for use not against a theoretical enemy of another age, but for defense against a present great land power."

"Numbers alone may not be decisive in battle," Johnson went on. "We must make sure that the deficiency in manpower will have its compensations in the superiority of our weapons, our skills, our facilities and our industrial potential."

He said this country has the edge in knowledge of atomic weapons and believes "We can inflict greater damage upon adversaries than they can inflict on us."

"We must make sure that the cost of attrition to an aggressor is so great that no attack could long be continued by him," Johnson said.

"But we must endeavor at all times to maintain such munitions supremacy that any potential enemy will be discouraged entirely from taking to the warpath of aggression in the first place," he added.

Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower warned the Legion committeemen that a continuation of inter-service bickering would be disastrous to the armed forces.

He said argument over effectiveness of various weapons is obscuring attempts to complete unification.

He urged the Legion to use its influence to help shift the problems of unification from an "emotional atmosphere to a logical basis."

Sherman Got Full Backing From Nimitz

By Robert S. Allen

The inside story of how Admiral Forrest Sherman was selected as the Navy's new Chief of Operations is very revealing. As related by Secretary Francis Matthews, Admiral Chester Nimitz, Pacific war hero and former Chief of Operations, recommended Sherman.

This is Matthews' account:

"I first started looking for a new chief on October 4. In a conference that day with Admiral Denfeld, I told him frankly that his usefulness had ended. The following day, I told President Truman and Defense Secretary Johnson what I had said to Denfeld. They backed me up 100 percent.

"I then sent for a complete copy of the testimony on the original unification bill before Congress. I had recalled that Admiral Sherman took a leading part in drafting that bill and had been outspoken in support of unification. After going over carefully what he testified at these hearings, I decided to have a personal talk with him.

"In the meantime, I made a careful check of his record. Noting that he had served as deputy chief of staff to Admiral Nimitz, I arranged a meeting with him. Admiral Nimitz highly recommended Sherman as Denfeld's successor."

While impressed by this and Sherman's record, Matthews still did not come to a final decision. He first wanted to have a "cold-turkey" talk with Sherman. He was ordered to come to Washington. To avoid "prying" newsmen, Sherman was directed to land in Baltimore, where he was met by Matthews' personal car, and driven to Washington to Matthews' hotel apartment.

The two men conferred alone for 55 minutes.

Chief of the "key matters" raised by Matthews was that he would have the final say on all Navy policies.

Matthews pointed out that in exercising that authority he was acting as the personal representative of the President, who, under the Constitution, was Commander-in-Chief. And that, under the law, the controlling authority over the military was civilian.

Sherman replied that he sincerely believed in civilian control and had always accepted the authority of superiors. He also expressed confidence that unification could be made to work without in any way impairing the strength or morale of the Navy. He particularly stressed the need to maintain a powerful "sea-going Navy." Matthews heartily agreed on that.

"I think we are pretty generally in accord, Admiral," Matthews said. "Shall we go over to see the President?"

"I am ready, sir," replied Sherman.

Foreign Dollar Surpluses Used to Buy U.S. Gold as Devaluation Rumors Persist

By The Associated Press

Gold is flowing out of the United States after pouring in from foreign countries for 15 years without interruption except in wartime.

Officials said yesterday that foreign countries, in a reversal of the longtime trend, have bought enough gold from the great United States monetary stocks to cut them down a 108-million dollar fraction in seven weeks.

A mass of rumors that the United States will devalue the dollar, persisting doggedly in the face of repeated and emphatic top-level Government denials, appears to have had a big part in the trend shift, although other more normal reasons figured in it too.

Some foreign countries, having some United States dollars on hand that aren't immediately needed, have elected to swap them for gold on the theory, officials surmise, that the rumors might possibly have some merit.

In that case, they would profit if gold they bought now from the United States at $35 an ounce, plus a handling charge, could be sold back to the United States later for a higher figure.

United States officials, discussing the situation only on condition that they not be identified, contended the foreign countries taking this view would be smarter now to heed Secretary of the Treasury Snyder's devaluation denials.

The Treasury charges ¼ of 1 percent for "handling" on either its sales or purchases of gold. That alone is nearly 9 cents per ounce of gold. Boat or air shipments and insurance cost more.

Officials stress that foreign purchases of gold from the United States have been on a "modest" scale so far, unaccompanied by "nervousness" that should be apparent if devaluation expectations were strong.

Secretary Snyder has said flatly that Congress alone has power to devalue the dollar and that the Truman Administration has no intention of asking it to do so.

Other officials point out that the United States helped bring about recent foreign currency devaluations to bring a better balance in trade. Dollar devaluation would undo the results sought.

More Taxes Seen Defeated

By the United Press

Congressmen still in the Capital yesterday predicted defeat next year of President Truman's bid for more tax revenue to run his administrative program.

They predicted, moreover, that he may be faced with a revenue loss of 600 billion dollars to $1,250,000,000 through reduction or elimination of wartime excise taxes.

Senators Edward Martin (R., Pa.) and Edwin C. Johnson (D., Colo.) saw little likelihood that the House and Senate committees responsible for tax legislation would approve bills boosting individual or corporate rates. Both are members of the Senate Finance Committee.

And Martin forecast a fiscal year-end Federal deficit next June of about eight billion dollars, or $2,500,000,000 more than the Presidents new deficit estimate of $5,500,000,000. Martin said the coal and steel strikes will eat into anticipated Federal revenue by cutting down industrial income.

Johnson predicted the Senate will go even further toward eliminating excise taxes than the proposal he sponsored which is pending on the Senate calendar.

Johnson's bill would cut between 30 and 50 per cent from excises on admission tickets, toilet preparations, furs, luggage, transportation of persons, communication services, jewelry and other items. His estimate for the revenue loss from such a program is about 600 million dollars.

The few other legislators staying here during the current adjournment period also appeared to be dead set against higher taxes.

Truman Takes to Radio in Plea for Lehman

Mr. Truman's personal entry into the New York race.

Dulles said he believed New York State can get along without "calling on the Pendergast machine." Boss Tom Pendergast's Missouri organization helped elect Mr. Truman a Senator.

Dewey said President Truman "frantically" rushed back from a trip to make the radio speech.

Something must have happened, Dewey said, because two weeks ago the President said the race was in the bag for Lehman.

Mr. Truman called for the reelection of William O'Dwyer as mayor of New York.

The President spoke for the last five minutes of a half-hour Democratic-sponsored broadcast originating from various points. The program was broadcast by CBS in New York State.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, speaking here, introduced the President. Other participants on the program included Philip Murray, CIO president, and William Green, AFL president.

In his speech on the broadcast, Lehman repeated that the basic issue of the campaign is whether "great economic and social gains" are maintained.

Lehman said Dulles and Dewey have concentrated "on besmirching the so-called welfare State" in denouncing the Democratic program.

Both Murray and Green said an important issue is repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

The New York election tops in national interest in the off-year voting Tuesday over the Nation.

The balloting also will be marked by a gubernatorial contest in New Jersey, the filling of two vacant United States House seats from Brooklyn and San Francisco and a score of mayoral races in the larger cities.

Mr. Truman said the main issue before the New York voters is whether or not they will have a Senator who will work to promote the general welfare of the people.

He said it is important to remember that the seat at stake is that of former Senator Wagner, whom he described as "one of the great humanitarian statesmen of our time."

The President said Lehman will carry on the "great tradition" established by Wagner and is a man worthy to take Wagner's place.

About 6,300,000 New York voters will go to the polls next week in this major test of President Truman's domestic policies. The off-year election is the only one in the Nation involving a Senate seat this year.

Campaigning Eases Up in Northern Virginia As Candidates Await Election on Tuesday

By Judy Spivak
Post Reporter

Political activity eased up in northern Virginia yesterday as candidates in a half-dozen contested races sized up their campaign efforts for Tuesday's election.

Arlington County, where three candidates seek pivotal seat on the County Board and three others two seats in the House of Delegates, has been the scene of unusual activity. Some candidates made as many as four nightly appearances several times a week before civic groups.

Candidates Listed

Fighting for the County Board seat, which will spell either continued Democratic control of the five-man board, or a shift to nonpartisan control, are:

Basil M. DeLashmutt,, incumbent Democratic chairman of the board, and a member for 10 years. He is 46, an Arlington surveyor and engineer, and lives at 3311 N. Glebe rd.

Robert W. Cox, nonpartisan candidate nominated by a Town Meeting convention, sponsored by the Arlington Civic Federation, the County Council of P-TA's, Citizens Committee for School Improvement, Home Protective Association, Better Government League and Arlington League of Women Voters. He is 34, a budget officer with the Federal Communications Commission, and lives at 2518 S. 2d st.

Jacob Bechtel, 72, independent. He is a carpenter and lives at 5931 S. Carlyn Spring rd.

Chief campaign issue is that of board control by organization Democrats or a nonpartisan faction.

'Unbusiness-like' Conduct

Cox has accused DeLashmutt of "unbusiness-like" conduct of the board's business because, he says, the board:

1. Did not buy land for recreational purposes when it still was cheap.
2. Has not protected the courthouse and other county property with adequate insurance.
3. Does not consult with citizen's groups regularly "to find out what the customers want."
4. Has not protected citizens against execessive utility rates.
5. Has failed to iron out tax inequities.
6. Has not supported the elected school board wholeheartedly.

DeLashmutt has said he is running on his 10-year board record. He claims credit for:

1. A long-range capital improvements program in the county.
2. Initiation of a permanent master zoning plan now being worked on.
3. Leadership in the fight for an incinerator, now under construction.

Both candidates have accused each other of being for higher taxes and both have indorsed more recreation facilities.

Bechtel, who has no campaign platform, has said he favors a "planned economy for Arlington." He has accused the present board of unwisely spending "plenty of-money" received from taxes.

Agree on Many Issues

The three candidates for two Arlington seats in the House of Delegates have fought a spirited campaign, despite their agreement on many basic issues.

Incumbent Democrats J. Maynard Magruder and George Damm have carried a heavy speaking schedule, probably remembering that their Republican opponent, I. Lee Potter, failed to win a seat on the County Board last year by the slim margin of 29 votes. Potter, then running as an independent, lost to Democrat Alfred E. Frisbie.

Magruder, 49, who is in the insurance and real estate business in Arlington, lives at 4119 23d st. He has been in the Legislature since 1943.

Damm, 53, an Arlington lawyer, lives at 3414 Pershing dr. He was first elected in 1945.

Potter, 39, is a member of the construction firm of MacPherson and Potter, lives at 4900 Washington blvd.

All three candidates have said they favor legislation permitting Virginia localities to accept Federal funds for school purposes.

Potter favors mandatory jury service for women (Virginia now has all-male juries), while Damm and Magruder have said they will support permissive legislation only for female jury duty.

Potter has attacked proposed amendments to abolish the poll tax and make other franchise changes, Magruder has taken no stand, and Damm has taken no official stand, but said he personally will vote against them. All three have said they will support a simpler amendment abolishing the poll tax, if this proposal fails to pass Tuesday.

Three Oppose Sales Tax

A major plank in the platforms of both Magruder and Damm has been legislation to make rural communities "pull their load" of the tax burden by forcing them to levy a stipulated minimum tax per hundred dollars of true property value, before State aid is granted. Potter has agreed.

All three oppose a sales tax.

Potter has campaigned most loudly for abolition of the State Milk Commission.

Two uncontested seats on the Arlington School Board will be filled by nominees of a special nonpartisan School Board Nominating Convention, held in September. They are:

Erwin R. Draheim, 41, chief of the pre-service personnel training section in the Department of Agriculture.

Curtis E. Tuthill, 34-year-old incumbent, associate professor of psychology at George Washington University.

Races in Alexandria

In Alexandria, voters will be asked to decide only one contested race—that for a seat in the House of Delegates.

In addition, however, city voters will ballot in an advisory referendum on whether the City Council, City Collector and City Attorney should be elected on a nonpartisan basis.

This proposal is in a new city charter, not yet released by the Charter Revision Commission, which requested the referendum.

Even though voters indorse the nonpartisan elections, the charter still must be accepted by the City Council, which can alter it. It then must be submitted to the Virginia General Assembly before it becomes law.

Candidates for the House of Delegates seat are:

Armistead L. Boothe, incumbent Democrat. He is 42, a member of the House of Delegates since 1947, and lives on Vicar la., Seminary Hill.

Richard W. Buckingham, Republican. He is 38, a former minister, now in the insurance business, and lives at 1264 Martha Custis dr.

Boone favors the nonpartisan election proposal, despite opposition of the City Democratic Committee. He is "mildly" in favor of the Campbell suffrage amendments.

Buckingham also favors the nonpartisan local elections, but has opposed the Campbell amendments.

Noncontested Races

Noncontested Alexandria offices are:

Commonwealth's Attorney, Howard W. Smith, jr., 34, incumbent Democrat. He was appointed in 1947 to fill the unexpired term of Albert V. Bryan, now a Federal judge; lives at 210 W. Walnut st.

Juvenile and Domestic Relations Justice, Marion B. West, 42, incumbent Democrat. He lives at 2803 Valley dr.

City Sergeant—Frank Moriarity, 51, incumbent. Lives at 1907 Commonwealth ave.

Commissioner of Revenue, Charles A. Callahan, 56, appointed in 1944 to fill the unexpired term of his father; lives at 15 W. Rosemont ave.

Civic and Police Justice, James R. Duncan, 48, incumbent since 1925. Lives at 203 Rosemont ave.

Fairfax County Election

Only office to be filled in Fairfax is a seat in the House of Delegates. Opponents are:

Edwin Lynch, 36, Democrat of Annandale. A real estate dealer and dairy farmer, he lost the nomination in 1947 by one vote, on recount, to Delegate Robert J. McCandlish.

Douglas A. Clark, 39, Republican, of Merrifield. He has been a practicing lawyer in the District for 14 years.

Lynch and Clark both oppose the Campbell suffrage amendments.

Major Contest in Falls Church

In Falls Church, the major contest is that of Commissioner of Revenue. Candidates are:

LaRue Van Meter, 50, incumbent Democrat, also serving the appointive office of City Attorney. He lives at 121 Lee st.

A. Burke Hertz, 29, Democrat, and attorney with the Falls Church firm of Gibson and Hix. He lives at 1011 Fowler st.

Hertz has charged that Van Meter, as City Attorney, has insufficient time to devote to the Revenue Commissioner's job in the growing city.

Van Meter has replied the revenue job is not full-time, since State law requires that a Deputy Revenue Commissioner be employed.

The post of City Treasurer is uncontested and will go to James E. Ferguson, 80-year-old incumbent. He was appointed when Falls Church became a city in 1948. He lives at 125 Spring st.

In Ward 1 of the city, voters will choose between two candidates for justice of the peace. They are: Incumbent, George T. McNab, 60, real estate man. Lives at 115 Hillwood ave.

Robert C. Fitzgerald, 28, Falls Church attorney. Lives at 142 S. Virginia ave.

No candidates have filed for justice of the peace in Falls Church Wards 2 and 3, posts now unfilled. Voters may write in candidates in these wards.

Columbus Called Late

Death" plague that scourged Europe in the Middle Ages.

For one thing, he says he has discovered near Clarksville, Va., an ancient iron-smelting furnace which he estimates was constructed "sometime before the year 1 A.D."

He also contends that two different groups of pre-Columbian ironworkers occupied areas near Clarksville and that "one site, located close to the river, had apparently been used by Vikings for building and repairing their boats. On this site, Viking tools, chisels, clinch nails, boat spikes, caulking irons . . . and nail heads were found," he said.

The engineer made his claims in a distributed statement and in talks to reporters invited to view the exhibits he said substantiated his claims.

One Smithsonian archeologist, Dr. Henry Collins, told a reporter "We are unable to evaluate his claims" because of absence of published scientific proof in the technical literature of archeologists. "Until such evidence is presented," he added, "I personally will remain skeptical."

Mallery said that he had discovered several "hearth-pit iron-smelting furnaces" and various iron objects in certain "pre-Columbian" mounds in Ross County, Ohio.

Dr. George A. Ellinger of the National Bureau of Standards told a reporter that Bureau metallurgists had informally made microscopic examination of two iron slabs which Mallery said he had unearthed from beneath furnaces in the Ohio mounds.

Ellinger said, "We can only say that this iron was made sometime prior to say 100 or 150 years ago, but how much prior we can not state."

Bureau Urges Expansion of U. S. Highways

By the United Press

The Federal Bureau of Public Roads yesterday called for immediate expansion and improvement of the Nation's highways, particularly the 40,000 miles of interstate systems, to reduce killings by motor vehicles.

Thomas H. MacDonald, commissioner of public roads, said an "astounding increase in the number of motor vehicles makes an expanded road construction program necessary to halt a frightful loss of life and provide transportation routes essential to national economy.

"Today 43 million cars and trucks vie for a place on America's highways as compared to only 26 million in 1930," MacDonald said.

"Placed end to end, they would form a solid moving caravan 225,000 miles long—a fantastic fleet girdling the earth more than nine times. . 5,000,000 units of which rolled off assembly lines this year.

"It seems necessary, in the light of these startling facts, to urge an immediate highway expansion and improvement program . . . any complacency we may have as to the adequacy of our roads to serve in peace or war is shattered by cold, hard facts."

MacDonald said he felt any attempt to hold up the program . . a construction backlog to provide employment in event of a depression would be a "serious mistake."

"Economists who urge this course," he said, "lose sight of the fact that our national economy today revolves about highway transportation. Furthermore, we do not like to think of the frightful loss of life which must be charged to an archaic highway system. I am convinced that if in 1948 the rural sections of the interstate system had been improved as proposed, 1400 lives lost in traffic accidents might have been saved."

clusion that major Democratic nominees—all sanctioned by the organization—will win with no difficulty. State Senator John S. Battle, of Charlottesville, therefore would be elected Governor, while Lieutenant Governor L. Preston Collins and Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, jr., would keep their present jobs.

The Campbell amendments, however, present a different picture.

Francis Pickens Miller, No. 2 gubernatorial candidate in the August primary, said this weekend that the amendments "are already well licked."

Amendment Vote Forecast

He estimated that 220,000 voters will go to the polls Tuesday, of whom 150,000 will vote on the amendments. About 85,000 will oppose them, while 65,000 will vote for them, Miller predicted.

Delegate Robert M. Whitehead of Nelson County, a frequent champion of the "antiorganization" cause in Virginia, has been active in work of the nonpartisan Virginia Right-to-Vote League, organized to beat the amendments. He was less positive than Miller, but told a reporter that "over-all indications are that the amendments wil be defeated."

On the other side, Senator Battle, who defeated Miller by more than 23,000 votes in the Democratic primary, said a week ago he thought there was a "distinct possibility" the amendments would be defeated because of "widespread misunderstanding" of them.

Almond, who has stumped the State with Battle on behalf of the proposal, told The Washington Post he could not make a prediction. He merely said the amendments "will be adopted if enough people understand them," adding that he "feels certain their chances have been boosted considerably in the last 20 days."

Defeat Predicted

Representative Howard W. Smith, Eighth District Democrat, told a reporter he has not campaigned for the changes, although he favors them. Opposition has been so heavy, he added, that he "wouldn't be at all surprised if they were defeated."

This opposition has found strength in a coalition of diversified political elements, including Republicans, antiorganization Democrats and, even a few members of the so-called "Byrd machine." However, the State Democratic organization, on the whole, has formed the core of support for the amendments.

Voters who mark an "X" beside the word "For" on their ballot will be voting to:

1. Abolish the poll tax as a prerequisite for voting.

2. Allow the General Assembly to authorize cities and counties to levy a "capitation" tax not to exceed $1.

School Purposes Tax

3. Permit the General Assembly to tax adults up to $3 a year for school purposes, with the provision that it be paid before "issuance of any license or permit for any privilege," including hunting, fishing and automobile licenses.

4. Permit the General Assembly to prescribe "such tests as to literacy and such further requirements" as it may consider necessary as voting qualifications.

5. Require annual renewal of registration, except for persons listed in the general registration of 1902 and 1903, in such manner as may be prescribed by law. Suggested means include (1) application in person at the board of elections; (2) permitting the act of voting in one year to constitute registration for the next: (3) payment, before penalty date of all personal taxes.

6. Limit voting lists to persons currently registered in each precinct 120 days before a primary or general election, with lists of qualified voters to be posted 90 days before such elections.

Local Board Question

7. Give constitutional authority to the State Board of Elections, which would in turn have authority over local boards, and give the General Assembly authority to decide who shall appoint local boards.

8. Set up permanent local registration offices with uniform methods of registration.

Voters who mark an "X" beside the word "against" on their ballot will be voting to retain present laws governing suffrage, which provide for:

1. Payment of a $1.50 poll tax for each of three years preceding the current year to be qualified to vote.

2. An applicant to answer under oath in writing any and all questions affecting his qualifications as an elector, such as his name, age, date and place of birth, etc.

Other Provisions

3. Permanent registration of voters.

4. Closing of registration books 30 days before elections.

5. Appointment of the State Board of Elections by the Governor, confirmed by the General Assembly, with local boards appointed by circuit and corporation courts.

While this question has occupied the statewide political spotlight since the Democratic and Republic primaries, local contests are expected to stimulate activity at the polls.

In Greater Washington, there are three contests for four House of Delegates seats. Three candidates seek a seat on the Arlington County Board. Two are running for Commissioner of Revenue in Falls Church, where two candidates are competing for a Justice of the Peace job.

Nonpartisan Voting

Alexandria voters decide in a special election whether councilmen and elective officers may be chosen on a nonpartisan basis.

Strongest opposition to 59-year-old Senator Battle, who has been a member of the General Assembly for 19 years, will come from the Republican gubernatorial candidate, Walter Johnson, 53, Commonwealth's Attorney of Northumberland County, who lives at Heathsville. Clarke T. Robb, 45, a librarian and teacher from Herndon, is the Social-Democrat candidate for governor.

The Republican Party did not nominate a candidate for Attorney General, so Almond, the 51-year-old incumbent from Roanoke, is opposed only by Sidney Moore, 30, the Social-Democratic candidate from Portsmouth.

For the lieutenant governorship Collins, 51, of Lynchburg, the incumbent, received the Democratic nomination, while E. Thomas McGuire of Petersburg, a 37-year-old law student at William and Mary College, is the Republican candidate.

Play Therapy Used in Montgomery Clinic

The Washington Post

TREATMENT—Dr. Robert R. Morris, clinical superintendent of the Montgomery County Mental Hygiene Clinic, uses puppets as a medium of treatment for a young patient

Eleven-year-old Ronnie used to be the neighborhood bully, but now he participates in group play, his aggressiveness is now leadership and his major attack is his school work.

Ronnie's improvement was brought about through psychiatric examination, diagnosis and therapy at the Montgomery County Mental Hygiene Clinic, a Red Feather agency.

The change in his personality was accomplished through clinical treatment of Ronnie alone. While he was being observed, other members of his family were similarly being interviewed by the clinic staff.

Whole Family Treated

Clinical observations showed his mother, who complained of nervous exhaustion because of her inability to cope with her mischievous son, had dreaded her domineering father during childhood. To compensate for this, she was unable to impose any restrictions on Ronnie.

The boy's father was found to be suffering from a feeling of inadequacy in his Government position which led to tension in his home life.

Ronnie's extroverted, domineering attitude had built up a feeling of inferiority in his younger sister, Sallie, so that she was terrified to attempt anything new or different. In addition, she had taken to stammering.

Baby Marie had begun to show signs of temper tantrums and other indications of maladjustment.

Through the services of the clinic, the father's self-confidence was restored, the mother developed poise in the conduct of her household. Sallie developed a feeling of security and her speech improved. The family improvement reflected itself in the baby's behavior progress without professional help.

Many Cases Aided

Ronnie and his family are just one of many cases in which the clinic has been able to restore badly confused persons to a normal and useful life.

The clinic is now in its sixth full-time year. It began on a once-a-month basis in 1935, conducted by Dr. H. Whitman Newell, of the Mental Hygiene Society, Baltimore, sponsored by the Montgomery County Mental Hygiene Committee.

The present clinic has a professional staff of five, headed by Dr. Robert R. Morris, clinical superintendent. He is assisted by a psychiatrist, two psychiatric social workers and a clinical psychologist. It handles about 250 cases a year, the majority referred by other social agencies in the county.

However, Dr. Morris says the publicity being given mental hygiene work is causing an increasing number of persons to request assistance without prior referral.

The Montgomery County Mental Hygiene Clinic has been a participating agency of County Community Chest and Council since 1944.

Although some State and Federal funds are available for the clinic's operation, it is dependent to a large part on Community Chest funds.

Its work is limited, according to Dr. Morris, by the size of its staff and quarters. A recent survey of 21,323 county school children showed 605 children who, while not requiring transfer to special schools, are in need of psychological or psychiatric help, he said.

San Joaquin Baby Deaths Spur Probe

Fresno, Calif., Nov. 5 (U.P.)—Deaths of eight babies from malnutrition today spurred health investigations of migrant workers in the San Joaquin valley.

Authorities reported conditions similar to the "Grapes of Wrath" poverty of the depression years, with youngsters using outdoor toilets for playhouses

Dr. Donald Upp, Kings County health officer, found two more infant deaths October 28 and 30 as the probe moved to the end of its first week.

Fresno County officials said two other children died from malnutrition October 30 and November 2.

Some 150,000 migrant farmers are living in the multimillion-dollar farmland valley while harvesting cotton, fruits and vegetables.

Social and health agencies in Tulare County reported a workers' camp made of packing-box huts; children looking as though their hair had never been combed; a camp of 19 houses with only two toilets—six to 10 persons living in each house.

Camp managers said some of the hands were earning $18 to $20 a day but "only wanted to drink and gamble." Managers said the camps were clean and decent three weeks ago, but workers failed to care for them.

Camp Manager William Silvers said his efforts to clean up the camp caused a fight in which he was shot in the leg.

"You would find the same situation in any county in the San Joaquin valley," said Lee A. Stones, Madera County health officer.

Expert Finds U. S. Women Poor Mothers

Chicago, Nov. 5 (U.P.)—American women make poor mothers, a research specialist said today.

One reason is that the American woman has too much freedom, said Dr. Lester Warren Sontag, director of the Samuel S. Fels Research Institute of Antioch College.

"She is all too likely to find preparing a formula, washing diapers and getting meals a poor vocational substitute for her previous participation in the business or professional world," he said. "And the prattle of a 2-year-old, for all his charms, is scarcely a substitute for the sociability the mother once freely participated in with adults."

Sontag presented his observations to the Gerontological Society, Inc., a group which specializes in the study of phenomena of old age.

He listed these factors as responsible for the situation:

The coeducational and competitive basis of the United States education system: the frequency of direct competition with men in the business world; the freedom of social movement of American women, and a tendency to appraise all sorts of effort in the dollars paid for it.

"Marriage poses many problems of a frustrating nature to the woman who has been reared and geared to competition, to freedom and to monetary reward. These factors are not inherent in homemaking," he reported.

It is easier for the male to avoid frustration, he said.

night said Bridoux was ordered to make a left traffic pattern, which meant to circle the field to the left. Instead, Seltzer said, Bridoux came straight in from the south.

Bolling Air Base officials first told The Washington Post that the B-25 made its simulated landing sometime between 11:30 a. m. and 11:35 a. m. Thursday, passing 200 feet above the runways. Bolling said the B-25 then circled to the left of the airport, went around Mount Vernon and landed at Bolling at 11:48 a. m.

Bolling's commandant, Col. Sidney D. Grubbs, said yesterday it is "possible" that the B-25 maneuvers confused the Bolivian, but he doubted it.

Lieut. Ray H. Deem, jr., pilot of the Bolling B-25, said he saw no airplanes around National Airport when he made his simulated landing. Deem said his plane had cleared the area before the crash occurred.

Capt. Stephen Wheaton, co-pilot of the B-25, said yesterday that his plane touched down at Bolling "at least five minutes, but not more than 10 minutes" after the simulated landing. Sergt. William Buckwalter, in the Bolling control tower, said he saw the crash occur at the same instant the P-38 and the airliner collided.

The Wheaton statement would place the time of the crash at not later than 11:45 a. m.—possibly earlier.

There was no agreement on the exact time of the crash, but other authorities have placed the time from one to ten minutes later than Wheaton.

CAB investigators went into a huddle last night on the conflicting reports and indications as to when precisely the collision occurred.

The control tower at National Airport reportedly fixed the moment of impact at 11:46 a. m.

Sources close to the investigators said there were some indications that the collision occurred earlier than 11:46, but would not disclose what they were.

An Air Force spokesman said the man on duty at the Bolling Air Force base control tower fixed the time at 11:48 a.m.

The Bolling tower operator said he kept his eyes riveted on the B-25 as it approached for a landing and until it touched down. The instant its wheels hit the runway, the tower operator said he heard the frantic "Bolivia,, Bolivia" instructions shouted over National Airport's Baker channel. Looking up, the tower operator said, he saw the mid-air collision.

Immediately he flashed a look at the clock—11:48 a. m.—and trieved from the debris-filled water. Its hands were stopped at 11:48 a. m.

However, officials pointed out the watch might have been fast or slow.

Colonel Grubbs of Bolling Field issued a written order last June 8 that there should be no instrument landings or ground control approaches to National Airport because of traffic congestion over the field.

Bolling officials said this order never had been rescinded but on September 21 the chief traffic controller at National Airport, Stanley Stelzer, wrote a letter to the operations office at Bolling asking that practice landings and approaches be made at National Airport to provide practice for new controllers.

Because of what was termed an administrative error this letter was not brought to Colonel Grubbs' attention but was placed on the bulletin board at the flight training office at Bolling, the Air Force account said. Since then six or more runs have been made over National Airport.

Airport officials said that Colonel Grubbs will take no action in the case, even though his orders never were rescinded, because the men making flights over National Airport could not very well be held responsible.

Bolivian Remembers Contact With Tower

By the United Press

Pilot Erick Rios Bridoux recalls being in radio contact with the National Airport control tower just before last Tuesday's air disaster, according to persons who discussed it with him yesterday.

The pilot's questioners declined to say, however, whether the 30-year-old Bolivian remembered hearing a tower operator's frantic instructions for him to turn away and avoid the collision.

"I didn't see anything until a big plane suddenly shot up in front of me," Bridoux was quoted as saying.

"There was no real impact," he said. "When we came together it just felt like a saw going to work."

He saw the airliner for only a jarring moment. Then he was heading into the river.

"I could see it was a plane I hit," he said. "But I didn't know what kind it was."

From that moment on, Bridoux' story is a self-rescue to challenge the imagination.

ways chatting pleasantly to divert the couple from their sorrow. "They wanted to pay me," she said, "but I couldn't take anything from them. They looked like they didn't have a nickel."

One day, the couple departed for their home in the West, and shortly afterward, Mrs. Boynton returned to Washington. She wrote once, asking how things were, and received an answer saying the wife had died a few weeks after they left Florida.

The man sent her a box of his wife's personal effects and a letter saying he wanted to show his appreciation for the endless hours of care and nursing she had given. And he added, he decided to give her $500 each month for a year.

The letter came the day she moved into the Windsor Park Hotel, 2300 Connecticut ave. nw., and she cried most of that day upon receiving this news. "I was both happy and sad," she said. "I didn't want to take the money, but still I knew I needed it."

Nevertheless, despite her protests, the gift stuck. As for the extra money, Mrs. Boynton said the things it will buy will mean more to her because of the spirit behind it.

Veteran Group Asks Parochial School Aid

The Catholic War Veterans Auxiliary of Washington adopted a resolution yesterday for non-discrimination against parochial schools in any education aid program which Congress might vote on.

Clauses in a Federal-aid-to-education bill which would deny health, transportation and schoolbook assistance to children in private and parochial schools were said to discriminate againt one group of American children on the basis of their religious belief.

The resolution was passed at a business meeting at 11 a. m. which followed a mass at St. Patrick's Church at 9, celebrated by the Most Rev. Patrick A. O'Boyle, Archbishop of Washington. The auxiliary is holding its third annual meeting at the Hotel Washington.

New officers were installed at a dinner-dance meeting held last night at the hotel.

Officers and the auxiliaries to which they belong are: Mrs. Virginia C. Holden, Father John W. Daily Auxiliary, 171, president; Mrs. Leona Zuck, St. Peter's Auxiliary, 1071, secretary; Mrs. Margaret Huffman, St. Peter's Auxiliary, 1071, first vice president; Mrs. Elizabeth Money, Cochren Auxiliary, 1026, second vice president; Miss Mary Fargo, St. Peter's Auxiliary, 1071, third secretary; Miss Anna Donelly, James T. Brady Auxiliary, 180, parliamentarian; Mrs. Margaret O'Reilly, Cochren Auxiliary, 226, treasurer; Mrs. Louise Fortwengler, Father John W. Daily, Auxiliary 171, historian; Mrs. Anna Durity, Msgr. Bischoff, Auxiliary 163, officer of the day; Mrs. Marie Bullard, Cardinal Gibbons Auxiliary, 163, officer of the day, and Mrs. Olivia Peters and Mrs. Margaret Campbell, both of the Cochren Auxiliary, 226 trustees.

Speakers last evening were the D. C. Department Commander, Edward Peters, and the Rev. Joseph Flynn, CSSR National Chaplain of the Catholic War Veterans.

night said Bridoux was ordered to make a left traffic pattern, which meant to circle the field to the left. Instead, Seltzer said, Bridoux came straight in from the south.

Bolling Air Base officials first told The Washington Post that the B-25 made its simulated landing sometime between 11:30 a. m. and 11:35 a. m. Thursday, passing 200 feet above the runways. Bolling said the B-25 then circled to the left of the airport, went around Mount Vernon and landed at Bolling at 11:48 a. m.

Bolling's commandant, Col. Sidney D. Grubbs, said yesterday it is "possible" that the B-25 maneuvers confused the Bolivian, but he doubted it.

Lieut. Ray H. Deem, jr., pilot of the Bolling B-25, said he saw no airplanes around National Airport when he made his simulated landing. Deem said his plane had cleared the area before the crash occurred.

Capt. Stephen Wheaton, co-pilot of the B-25, said yesterday that his plane touched down at Bolling "at least five minutes, but not more than 10 minutes" after the simulated landing. Sergt. William Buckwalter, in the Bolling control tower, said he saw the crash occur at the same instant the P-38 and the airliner collided.

The Wheaton statement would place the time of the crash at not later than 11:45 a. m.—possibly earlier.

There was no agreement on the exact time of the crash, but other authorities have placed the time from one to ten minutes later than Wheaton.

Looking up, the tower operator said, he saw the mid-air collision.

Immediately he flashed a look at the clock—11:48 a. m.—and called out the crash boat which raced out in time to save the sinking Bolivian pilot.

Still another time was indicated by the fire station at National. A fireman on duty at the time said the crash call was logged at 11:50 a. m. This he said "might be wrong by a few minutes—it might have been closer ta 11:55 a. m."

Then there was a watch retrieved from the debris-filled water. Its hands were stopped at 11:48 a. m.

However, officials pointed out the watch might have been fast or slow.

Colonel Grubbs of Bolling Field issued a written order last June 8 that there should be no instrument landings or ground control approaches to National Airport because of traffic congestion over the field.

Some of the so-called "old guard," however, expressed the belief that Leeman would make a good president and that no bitterness or strong personal feeling would result from the seeming switch in federation sympathies.

In a statement to reporters, Leeman projected a plan for strengthening of the federation's newspaper, the Citizen, in circulation, advertising and news-gathering facilities.

He said he also hoped to get across a plan for assisting member bodies to increase membership and interest in community affairs.

The defeated faction maintained some strength in the Executive Board. Retiring president John H. Connaughton got 82 votes, the highest vote for the board.

Elected with him were Mrs. H. A. Bartlett, Burroughs; J. B. Dickman, N. Cleveland Park; Eugene E. Ditto, Georgetown; Thomas E. Lodge, American University Park; Clifford H. Women Called Hope For Saving Mankind

The Very Rev. Hunter Guthrie, president of Georgetown University, yesterday said women must act in this time of crisis to save mankind from destruction.

"Man has made a mess of his house," he told several hundred participants at a convocation celebrating Trinity College's fiftieth anniversary. "It is time woman took over and put it in order."

Representatives of 109 colleges and universities throughout the country attended the colorful convocation, presided over by Archbishop Patrick A. O'Boyle of Washington.

Honorary Degrees Granted

Archbishop O'Boyle, who is chairman of the college's board of trustees, presented honorary degrees to three distinguished women: Dr. Jane Margueretta Hoey, director of public assistance of the Federal Security Agency; Mother Mary Joseph Rogers, founder of the Foreign Mission Sisters of St. Dominic, Maryknoll Sisters, and Helen Constance White, professor of English at the University of Wisconsin.

Father Guthrie said confusion has taken over the male mind and modern science has resulted in loss of religion and materialism. He cited the pursuit of money and power as well as needless preoccupation with health.

Woman, by salvaging the family, can reestablish a normal scale of values by teaching children, he said. Scientific developments like the telephone and automobile scatter members of the family while the radio, television and the movies "vitiate the taste of her youngsters, coarsen their sense of humor and permanently fix their outlook on life at the subnormal age of six years," he asserted.

'Another Scientific Benefit'

Declaring that women must use courage, tact, prudence, perseverance, selfless devotion, self-control and love, Father Guthrie assailed "modern child psychology," which he termed "another scientific benefit."

"From the shallow depths of this tribal folklore," he said, "comes this synthetic pearl of wisdom: 'Leave the little darlings to their own diabolical devices; they can mess up their destiny without your assistance'."

A feature of the convocation ceremony was a processional march into Notre Dame auditorium of the college, where the program was held. Included were students, faculty members, official delegates and honor guests, recipients of honorary degrees and Archbishop O'Boyle.

In the morning Archbishop O'Boyle celebrated a mass of thanksgiving for students and faculty. This was followed by a solemn high mass of requiem for the deceased founders, faculty, alumnae and benefactors of the college, celebrated by the Right Rev. Patrick J. McCormick, rector of Catholic University.

In his sermon during the requiem mass, the Very Rev. Ignatius Smith, dean of the school of philosophy at Catholic University, paid tribute to the founders and said their hopes had been realized. The Nation has profited by the influence of Trinity-trained women, he said.

A solemn pontifical mass of thanksgiving will be celebrated by the Most Rev. Amleto G. Ciognani, Apostolic Delegate to the United States, at 10 a. m. today in the Trinity College Chapel. The Rev. Eugene Burke of the school of theology at Catholic University will preach the sermon.

The mass will be followed by a luncheon at the Alumnae Hall dining room, which will close the anniversary activities.

Malone Joins Kemper In Foreign Policy Blast

Kemper quit Thursday in protest against the committee's spending without replenishing its reserve funds. Also sharply criticized the bi-partisan foreign policy.

Schools Lead Equality Fight, Truman Says

American schools are standard bearers in the struggle for equality of opportunity and preservation of the inherent dignity of man, President Truman said last night.

The Federal Diary

Congress Got 6 Bills To Aid U. S. Workers On Session's Last Day

Half a dozen new bills to amend the Retirement Act and to help Federal workers who are laid off were introduced in Congress on the last day it was in session.

These measures are getting more than routine attention because of the fight in steel and coal over pensions and old-age security. Under the Civil Service Retirement Act, Federal workers have a system which is far more progressive than the steel and coal workers are fighting for, but they must contribute 6 percent of their salaries to it.

Senator Downey (D., Calif.) sponsored several of the controversial bills. One of them would require Federal agencies, in making lay-offs, to first discharge all employes who are at least 60 and who have had a minimum of 30 years of service before any other employe in the same job, trade, or occupation is discharged.

A second Downey bill would pay any Federal worker a lifetime pension who is laid off after a minimum of 20 years of service. If he's under 60, his annuity would be reduced ¼ of 1 percent for each month he's under it. Another bill would continue family benefits under the retirement system for a year after an employe is laid off if he's under 62 and if he had five or more years of service. In other words, if a laid-off employe should die within a year, his family would get payments from the retirement system as if he had been employed at the time of his death. Still another Downey bill would pay an annuity to a Federal worker at age 55 who is laid off after a minimum of five years of service.

A bill by Senator Pepper (D., Fla.) would bring Federal workers under Social Security's unemployment compensation system. The President has recommended that Federal workers be protected from unemployment by the system. Several years ago a bill to extend this benefit to Federal workers was reported to the Senate.

ABSORB: The Budget Bureau has directed Federal agencies to absorb the 125 million dollars annual cost of the pay-reclassification act whenever and wherever possible. It's a safe bet that a substantial portion of the cost will be absorbed and some of the agencies will make minor staff reductions to balance their budgets.

The agencies have been told that they must soak up the costs of two pay acts: (1) the executive pay-raise law, and (2) the allocation of 400 employes and officials to the three new super grades, GS-16 ($11,200 to $12,000), GS-17 ($12,200 to $13,000) and GS-18 ($14,000). The law forbids any Federal agency from requesting deficiency funds from Congress to pay the cost of higher job classifications.

MILITARY AGENCIES: Army and Navy, it's reported, will be ordered to soak up the additional cost of the classified law. Air Force also must be included. With the big reduction of civilian employes in the military agencies, the cost of the pay raise is a minor problem for them. Defense Secretary Johnson hopes to save several hundred million dollars during this fiscal year out of civilian salary funds.

As tipped off here Monday, there is more talk in the Pentagon of a net cutback in civilian Army and Navy personnel. Preliminary plans for the reduction are reported to include a lay-off in the departmental service here. However, the agencies have been anticipating such an order, civilian personnel in most offices have been "frozen," and few vacancies have been filled over the past several months. Any new reduction here, if and when ordered, is likely to abolish mainly jobs that are already vacated.

Mental Care Target Of Virginia Report

State Institutions Called Substandard And Undermanned

Richmond, Va., Nov. 5 (AP).—In a 160-page document, Charles J. Duke, jr., chief of the reorganization staff, reported today to Governor Tuck that the State's mental institutions are "still substandard" and "undermanned."

"As a result, patients are not being cured and discharged for lack of adequate treatment; and patients, who have recovered, frequently are not discharged promptly. The institutions will still be inadequately housed when the construction now authorized is completed," Duke added.

The report, which covered an examination of every phase of the mental program in Virginia, said in capital letters:

"If there is to be a limit to the mounting cost of caring for the mentally ill it must result from first halting, and then reversing, the trend that has seen the mental institutions population increase, during the past 30 years, from two per thousand population to four per thousand population.

"Profit From Treatment"

"Fundamentally, the savings lie in the performance of the basic function of preserving, for a useful place in society, those citizens who can profit from treatment as distinguished from those for whom the State must provide continuing custodial care."

These were the things the report suggested the State should focus its attention on: Improvement of measures to prevent mental illness; expansion and improvement of staff, primarily in those occupations required for treatment and discharge of patients; construction of required physical facilities to prevent overcrowding and to provide for future increases in the hospitals; service aimed at helping curable patients and those who have tuberculosis and epilepsy; correction and modernization of laws on commitment and discharge; improvement in staff services in the central office the hospital system.

The report made 22 recommendations—and almost 100 other suggestions—to carry out these aims.

One recommendation was for the early establishment of a training center for specialists in mental illness at the Medical College of Virginia; specifically, the Institute of Psychiatry authorized by an act of the legislature in 1944.

At Tuck's Request

Duke's study was not a part of the regular reorganization program intended to implement statutory changes made by the General Assembly in 1948. It was undertaken at the specific request of the Governor.

The report proposed that the State undertake a capital improvement program for the next 10 years of about 52 million dollars, of which 35 million dollars would be provided during the next five bienniums at the rate of some seven million dollars a biennium. The remaining 17 million dollars would be provided as soon as funds are available.

6 Points

Association Maps Plans For Schools

A six-point educational improvement program for Washington has been mapped out by the District Public Schools Association.

Hammond

George R. Hammond, president, said the program stresses improved facilities and an expansion in safety education programs.

The program calls for:

1. Legislation for a Federal loan to finance all necessary school construction.

2. A follow-through drive for carrying out recommendations of this year's Strayer report on District school needs. The program also suggests formation of a citizens committee to keep in touch with developments based on the Strayer report, and to make suggestions.

3. The addition of 12 more driver training courses to complete coverage of the District high schools.

4. Improvement of the high school athletic program. The association feels the Board of Education should study the present setup, develop a "better and more wholesome type of athletic program."

5. Establishment of a separate department for safety education in all grades of the District public schools.

6. Improved medical and dental facilities in all schools.

Colonel R. A. Lawn To Head Hospital At Bolling Base

Lieut. Col. Raymond A. Lawn, 40, of Minneapolis, Minn., yesterday was named command surgeon of Headquarters Command, USAF, and commanding officer of Bolling Air Force Base station hospital.

Lawn

He received his medical degree from the University of Minnesota and did postgraduate surgery at the Cook County Hospital in Chicago. He joined the Air Force about 10 years ago. In 1942 he was graduated from the School of Aviation Medicine at Randolph Field, Texas.

Colonel Lawn served with the Sixty-second Fighter Wing, Twelfth Air Force in Italy for eight months during World War II. After the war he did a two-year stint in Germany with the Twelfth Tactical Air Command. He and his wife will live at Bolling Field.

7½% Rent Increase Granted To Westchester Apartments

Rent increases of 7.48 percent have been granted for 525 units at the Westchester Apartments, 4000 Cathedral ave., nw., by the District Rent Control office.

Findings of Examiner William F. Mansfield, announced after a hearing Friday, were almost identical to a compromise agreed upon during the hearing by the Realest Corp. and 111 of its tenants.

The findings will become final November 14 unless appeal for review is made to the District Rent Control Administrator.

Monthly rents now ranging from $60.50 to $230 would be increased to range from $65 to $247.25.

The corporation had asked a 12.5 percent increase, which would have brought in an additional $85,041.75 a year, to compensate for higher operating costs, increased taxes and capital improvements. The group of tenants offered to settle for 7.5 percent after hiring a certified public accountant to examine the corporation's books.

Santa Claus Arrives Here Chasing Truman, Dear Alben, High Brass Into the Background

President Truman was displaced yesterday as the Capital's No. 1 citizen, effective until midnight December 24.

In view of the outstanding—and nonpartisan—character of the gentleman who thus accomplished what the Republicans have tried so vainly to do, the White House didn't mind, it was authoritatively reported.

Santa Claus came to town.

Traveling by plane, train and an undisclosed means direct from the North Pole, Santa took up residence simultaneously in Washington department stores—no trick at all for a Santa Claus.

Thousands of young people were on hand to have a few important words with him at Woodward & Lothrop's, Lansburgh & Bros., and the Hecht stores here and in Silver Spring.

They found the old gent ready as ever to discuss various interesting possibilities concerning the morning of December 25—but smart as a whip, too, in extracting promise for promise.

One very young man settled himself comfortably on the red-panted knee and conveyed up into the white beard above him his order for one bicycle.

"If I bring you a bicycle," the beard parted, "will you stay out of the street?"

Then came a shy request for a red scooter. The knee rocked and the beard opened:

"Will you roll it only when mamma tells you to?"

A small blond-haired creature going on 5 suggested that all problems pressing her would be solved by a doll about her own size.

Santa Claus pursed his lips and turned over the tiny hand almost in his: Whoops, evidence of fingernail biting!

"You haven't been very good since last Christmas, have you?" he observed, while the big eyes grew bigger at this uncanny perception. "I'll bring you a doll—if you stop biting."

No Sluff, Whatever That Is

The fact that Santa Claus, who was no sluff at psychology even before the word was invented, has now gone in for some of the more formal tenets of the science seemed to be producing pleasing effects.

No one, at any rate, was seen to turn down an electric train simply because he had to promise not to operate it at midnight and disturb his old man's sleep.

In point of fact, Santa now instills modern psychology into his helpers at the only Santa Claus school in the world, at Albion, N. Y., with a former toy manufacturer as his chief assistant.

That part of Santa Claus which was at Woodward & Lothrop's and the two Hecht stores yesterday had stopped at this school, to check up on things, on his way down from the North Pole. That part of Santa Claus which was at Lansburgh's had got his additional psychology while doing a side stint as a Ringling Brothers, Barnum & Bailey clown.

The 10th and G sts. corner was thronged with 6-months-and-up, life-long disciples of Santa Claus with or without psychology.

Uses Convertible

Shedding his reindeer for a Lincoln convertible, Santa Claus arrived at his Woodward & Lothrop station with police escort. A bit earlier he had set down via Capital Airlines at National Airport, where the p.a. system announced that the plane had been a little late from having to de-ice the wings flying down from the North Pole, but that his disciples were not to worry, Santa was coming in safe. Only disciples under 15, the p.a. said, would be allowed down the concourse.

It was perfect Santa Claus weather—cold and crisp—and the wondrous chords of "Jingle Bells" filled the air as Santa's vast local following greeted him both at 10th and G and at the B. & O. station at Silver Spring.

For Santa arrived by rail, too, and from the station rode in a miniature B. & O. train over the streets to Hecht's.

Santa's followers were accompanied mostly by mamas but there were a good many papas who handled the job, too. Some more very effective psychology at work.

Florida Tags, Parking Ticket Trap Suspect

The ordinary obscurity of an out-of-town auto tagged for a parking violation proved a boomerang yesterday for Chandler Jones, 24, of Miami.

He is held under $3500 bond on a robbery charge after arraignment before U. S. Commissioner C. S. Lawrence, because his auto, with Florida tags, was parked improperly.

John C. Dennes, 35, of 5355 32d st. nw., an employe of the Army Map Service, told Detective Sergts. Nuncio Bonaccorsy nad Arthur H. Molle of the robbery squad, that he struck up an acquaintance with a stranger in the 500 block of 9th st. nw. Friday night.

Gets Offer of a Ride

The stranger offered to drive him home, and did, Dennes related. Near his home, he said, he was slugged, robbed of his wristwatch and billfold with $19.

Up to that point, the story was the same as many others. But Dennes remembered the stranger's auto had Florida tags and that there was a parking ticket on it at 9th and E sts., when Dennes and his "friend" came from the tavern.

The officers took time out to have Dennes' head repaired with seven stitches at Emergency Hospital. Then they leafed through copies of parking tickets at the First Precinct and obtained the license number of a Florida car that had been tagged at 9th and E sts.

Admits Serving Time

Cruising downtown, they found the auto at 6:10 a. m., parked in the 900 block of K st. nw. A canvass of rooming houses and hotels in the neighborhood turned up a landlord at 928 K st., who said a man answering the description and driving the car was in the house.

When the officers called at the man's room, they said, they found Dennes' watch on his wrist and Dennes' billfold, minus identification cards, in his pocket.

After he was questioned, the sergeants said, Jones identified himself, admitted the robbery, and also admitted he has served a three-year term in Florida for robbery. He said he is a painter and has been here a week.

Forfeit Collateral

Arrests of 11 Stop 6-Day Dice Game

A "marathon" dice game, which Detective R. L. Runyon said had lasted six days, brought forfeiture of collasteral yesterday by 11 men arrested in a raid at the Buckingham apartments in Arlington.

The raid took place Friday night at the home of Broaddus F. Varner, 31, a bus driver of 467 N. Thomas st., Runyon said. It followed "innumerable" complaints from neighboring apartments, the officer said. He, Pvt. Arthur Brown, and ABC Investigator M. K. Bryant moved in to stop the long-distance dice game.

Runyon said Broaddus was charged with operating a gambling house and elected to forfeit $28.25. The others, who, officers said, elected to forfeit $13.25 each on charges of gambling were listed by police as:

Fred H. Perkins, 38, of 138 Mankin walk, Falls Church; Jay S. Zirkle, 26, of 729 N. Vermont st., Arlington; William E. Moore, 28, of 1900 N. Uhle st., Arlington; Marvin L. Gibson, 40, of 4334 Fairfax dr., Arlington; Joseph R. Noland, 32, of 191 Gundry dr., Falls Church; Theodore P. Magsig, 41, of 127 Church walk, Falls Church; Buck Goins, 27, of 6107 N. 18th st., Arlington; Milton L. Rouzee, 42, of 467 N. Thomas st., Arlington; Lucian D. Miller, 26, of 2317 N. Stuart st., Arlington, and Carlton Davis, 22, of 1009 N. Kensington st., Arlington.

Fairfax County Unifies Teaching Of Music Courses

A unified program of music instruction has been introduced in the Fairfax County school system, with full-time instrumental directors in each of the four high schools for the first time.

School officials said yesterday each high school music director will be responsible for developing programs in elementary schools as well as high schools.

The new directors include P. J. Fuller, at Fairfax High School; Val Johnson, at Herndon High School; Mitchell Osadchuk, Mount Vernon High School, and Ernest B. Ryder, at Falls Church High School.

11 Accused Of Violating Liquor Laws

Eleven persons were arrested for alleged ABC violations in seven separate raids by police early yesterday.

James R. Kimbro, 39, his wife, Evelyn, 42, and Mrs. Rowena Spivey, 24, all of 2134 8th st. nw., were charged with possession of untaxed whisky. They were released under $500 bond each for appearance Monday before United States Commissioner Cyril S. Lawrence.

In addition, Mrs. Kimbro was charged with six counts of keeping and selling whiskey without a license, and Mrs. Spivey with two counts of keeping and selling whisky without a license. They pleaded not guilty to the charges before Municipal Court Judge Nadine Gallagher and were released under $500 bond each for jury trial December 21.

Greenbacks in Mouth

Police said the trio was arrested at the 8th st. address on a search warrant after an undercover man made several purchases there. The last was made shortly before the raid with two marked one-dollar bills, which were found in Mrs. Kimbro's mouth when a policeman searched her, police said.

About five gallons of "white" whisky, 23 botles of wine and six cans of beer were found on the premises, they said.

Wiley Jackson, 49, and Gladys Mathews, 30, both of 2214 Pomeroy ct. nw., were each charged with four counts of keeping and selling whisky without a license following a raid on the Pomeroy ct. address. Each was released under $500 bond for jury trial December 21.

Others Similarly Charged

Also released under $500 bond each for jury trial December 21 on charges of keeping and selling whisky without a license were:

George D. Governor, 44, of 70 N st. sw., eight counts, and Beulah Ross, 28, of 48 Florida ave. nw., six counts; both arrested at the N st. address.

William Johnson, 42, of 1537 7th st. nw., seven counts; arrested at his home.

Richard Hicks, 35, of 2023 8th st. nw., two counts; arrested at his home.

10 Hurt in 2 Days In Area Traffic

K St. at Circle

Traffic Count May Decide Underpass

A traffic count will be made shortly in the Washington Circle area to help determine if a proposed K street underpass should be constructed there.

At this time, the Highway Department favors the underpass as part of a program to make K street a crosstown route, J. N. Robertson, director, said yesterday.

With the opening of the Whitehurst Freeway almost a month ago, however, the circle's traffic pattern has changed considerably, he added.

Might Abandon Project

Hence the traffic count, the results of which may lead the Highway Department to push for construction of the underpass ahead of other planned projects or to abandon the project entirely, Robertson said.

The count will be an origin and destination survey to determine by which streets the largest number of vehicles are entering and leaving the circle. Four streets meet there—K st., Pennsylvania ave., 23d st. and New Hampshire ave.

Officials will make immediate use of the survey to help iron out any kinks that may have developed in the circle's present traffic pattern since the opening of the Freeway, they said.

Preliminary counts have shown a heavy increase in the use of K st., a negligible decrease in the use of 23d st. and a fairly large decrease in the use of Pennsylvania ave.

23d Street Traffic Drops

Spot checks before and after the opening of the Freeway show that during the peak rush hours traffic on K st. at 24th st. jumped from 188 to 1088 eastbound and 138 to 978 westbound. Southbound traffic on 23d st. dropped from 1004 to 959, according to spot checks, while eastbound on Pennsylvania ave. at 24th st. dropped from 978 to 594 and westbound from 820 to 523.

Despite heavier traffic around the circle, there have been few delays or tie-ups, Traffic Director George E. Keneipp, said. A heavy rainstorm and an accident caused long delays in traffic movements on two recent occasions, but on the whole a fast moving traffic pattern has been established at the circle, he declared.

"DARLING... HAVEN'T YOU GONE TO SLEEP YET?"
"I CAN'T SLEEP... MY CONSCIENCE BOTHERS ME."

Tiny thoughts gnaw at a man's mind in the dead of night . . .

"Can't forget the man from the Community Chest who rang my doorbell this evening . . . I wasn't polite . . . Told him I was short of money and couldn't give the way I did last year . . . I think he knew I was kidding him . . . He saw my car on the drive, the kids' bikes, the big dinner on the table . . . I guess I'll call him back and double my pledge . . . Now, conscience, let me go to sleep, will you?"

A man's most valuable possession is not his money—but his peace of mind. If a man could but see with his own eyes the people who benefit from the Red Feather services of health, child care, character building, family strengthening, then he could never be selfish about giving.

Let each man give what his conscience tells him to—and we'll have a better town for living—and sleeping!

Everybody benefits . . . Everybody gives

Judge Washington Won't Disown Tree

By Bill Brinkley
Post Reporter

This is the first in a series of six articles describing personalities and attainments of judges who have been newly appointed to Federal courts in Washington. The second will appear Monday.

The appointment of George Thomas Washington brings to the American judiciary the man who has more Father of His Country blood in his veins than any other living person — a circumstance which has not proved an unmixed blessing to the twentieth-century heir. At times, in fact, it has been somewhat painfully like having to live with Jove for your shadow.

The appointment also brings to the Court of Appeals a brilliant legal scholar—an American who at the age of 22 wrote a series of articles on English legal history for the leading British Empire law quarterly.

Add to the above the fact (and we take it the FBI knows all about this) that a tree, a literal, 16-foot tree, grows in the Department of Justice and that George Thomas Washington put it there—and you have a brief picture of the new appellate judge. Of the tree, more below.

Forty-one-year-old George T. Washington is a heavy-set, short, full-faced bachelor with iron-gray hair, a likin gfor gray suits.

Strictly a Non-Joiner

He is a non-joiner, partly because his ancestry has brought him so many unsolicited opportunities to join everything from here to Broken Bow and back. He probably would have been a non-joiner had his name been Smith. Certain law and honorary groups, plus the Elizabethan Club at Yale, and he is about quits on organizations. He is somewhat shy personally with a strong undercurrent of the humor that put that fantastic tree in his Justice Department office.

Offhand, he has roped in just about all the scholarly possibilities that have appeared in his path: Number 1 man in his Yale class, Phi Beta Kappa and its legal counterpart—Order of the Coif—Oxford University Rhodes Scholar, cum laude Yale law school graduate.

Into his years he would seem to have crammed—alternating—an uncommonly intensive dose of both the legal scholar and practitioner.

Teacher and Author

On the scholarly side, he has taught at Cornell Law School, authored a leading legal work, "Corporate Executives Compensation."

The practical experience spans a young law clerk's search of records in Detroit in connection with the transfer of the Dodge Co. to the Chrysler Corp., one of the largest legal undertakings of its kind in recent times; six years' private corporate law practice with two top New York firms; a Government career beginning in 1942, and including prosecution of the eight Nazi saboteurs who landed from submarines that year; chief of the lend-lease mission to Iran; and finally, since 1946, Assistant Solicitor General.

Fair Deal Democrat

Washington is a Truman Fair Deal Democrat, was "a moderate New Dealer."

"It is true that in the '30s, instead of coming down here I went to Wall Street. My interest has been in organization efficiency. What makes a corporation work, makes the United States Government work, makes the United Nations work, is above and beyond machinery.

"But good machinery can contribute immeasurably. I have felt that my contribution in Government has been along the line of trying to perfect its internal organization."

At 41, Washington becomes one of the younger appellate judges. His youth has mildly disturbed others—but not him.

His Name and Ancestry

About that name—and that ancestry.

Ohio-born only son of an Episcopal clergyman, George Thomas Washington is a direct, sixth-generation descendant of Samuel Washington, next younger brother of President George. It might seem a nice thing to be, and doubtless is. But this almost overpowering genealogy has meant that George Thomas, who desires a life in the twentieth, not in the eighteenth century, has had to be forever on his guard.

"I avoid too much thought about the past. I could get completely involved in it."

On his apartment wall hangs a wood painting of the first President highly reminiscent of the famous Stuart painting. Washington picked it up in a junk shop, believes it is contemporary to THE George—an incredible find, if so. But he will not be photographed with it.

Only Son and Single

He does belong to the Society of the Cincinnati as the nearest living relative of President George. Unmarried, and an only son, the line from Samuel will be broken for the first time unless something is done about it. If this is a weight on George Thomas' conscience he doesn't show it.

He has had to suffer, patiently, unlimited jokes when callers at the Department of Justice were told this was the office of George Washington. The jokes were almost unbearably compounded when the callers were referred to a man named Hamilton who, for a time, handled some of the business of Washington's office.

Though it's probably psychological, people frequently even note a resemblance between this George Washington and the other one.

But the fact of carrying with him so much important hemoglobin has not kept Washington himself always straight-faced on the subject.

Washington Tokens

In his Justice Department office is a modern magazine cartoon of a courtroom scene: the original George Washington is in the witness chair, and one juror whispers to another, "I have a feeling he's telling the truth." One visualizes the approaching scene of lawyers here addressing His Honor, George Washington.

Then, on a table beside his desk is a framed quote from the first President, surmounted by a small hand-done picture of him like the one on the dollar bill. The quote reads:

"Do not suffer your good nature, when application is made, to say 'Yes' when you ought to say 'No.' Remember that it is a public not a private cause that is to be injured or benefited by your choice."

Missing Significance

We were about to place great significance on this object. Quickly we visualized it as something the current George Washington had carried with him from his Yale days as the visual, guiding principle of life.

"Oh, that?" George Washington nodded to the frame when we asked him. "The director of Federal prisons sent that over a month ago. See what an obvious counterfeit that picture is? It was made by a man now behind bars."

Just beyond the table loomed the tree that grows in the Department of Justice.

It was a tree such as you have never seen in anybody's office. Its upper branches pushed against the high ceiling, its lower limbs spread massively over the corner of the giant Assistant Solicitor General's room. It was a tree which drinks one and a half gallons of water a day, fed by Washington and his assistants. It loooked like the celebrated plant in "Hellzapoppin"—at the end of the show.

When a man is a plant-lover he might as well really be one. Washington owns the tree, an avocado and now 10 years old, and put it where it is when it was a mere 4 feet high.

He hopes to take it with him to his new judge's chambers. The problem may prove too much, even for a George Washington. The tree looks as if it would fiercely resist anything less than a crane and a freight car.

Even in trees the current George Washington cannot escape the inevitable comparison. But the eighteenth-century George never had the dilemma of moving a 16-foot tree out of the Department of Justice. He cut his down.

Monday—Judge Burnita Shelton Matthews.

JUDGES OF THE FEDERAL AND MUNICIPAL COURTS WHICH FUNCTION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

U. S. Courts Here Try Cases Which Elsewhere Would Be State Processes

By Joseph Paull and Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporters

The past few months have brought a record number of changes in the courts of Washington, both Federal and Municipal. The chart at the right is the new composition of the various benches, complete except for the three new Municipal Court judges to be named by President Truman.

Following is a discussion of the part each court, and certain court adjuncts, play in the judicial process in this city, a city unique in that the Federal Courts try cases which elsewhere would be handled in a State court.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES: Established by the Constitution, the highest court in the land tries, but rarely, cases affecting ambassadors, and cases in which one of the 48 States is a party. For the most part it is an appeals court, taking its cases from the highest tribunals of the States and from the 11 Federal Circuit Courts of Appeals which cover the Nation.

The Supreme Court itself generally determines which cases it will hear on appeal, although certain cases may, by law, be certified to the high bench by the United States Court of Appeals. Generally speaking, the Supreme Court considers cases raising new questions of law and constitutionality. The nine justices as a group decide each case.

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS: Each of the 10 other Federal appeals courts covers several States. The District of Columbia alone has such a court to itself, just increased from six to nine judges (the three new judges serve under recess appointments until confirmed by the Senate). In addition, retired Chief Judge D. Lawrence Groner has recently been sitting in many cases. These judges sit in groups of three to hear cases, the decision of the majority of such a trio being the decision of the court. This court must grant a review in all cases brought to it by the losing party in the District Court. The court also may, at its discretion, review decisions of the Municipal Court of Appeals.

The Federal appeals court also reviews decisions of certain of the Government's quasi-judicial agencies.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT COLUMBIA: Just increased from 12 to 15 judges (with the three new judges serving under recess appointments), the District Court tries felony cases after indictments are returned by the District grand juries.

This court also handles civil cases where over $3000 is involved. Most injunction suits are brought here and in certain instances this court has the same right as the United Court of Claims to try suits against the United States for less than $10,000—if the United States has agreed to be sued.

The District Court is generally subdivided so that there are at any one time a Motions Court, a Pre-Trial Court, about four courts trying criminal cases, two non-jury civil courts and two jury civil courts. At times, such as when Constitutional questions are involved, three judges sit together to decide the case.

District Court also handles naturalizations, probate of wills, patent cases and land and building condemnations.

DISTRICT GRAND JURY: Chosen from a panel of District citizens, the grand jury of 23 members (there may be several grand juries sitting at one time) meets in secret to determine whether it should charge accused criminals with felonies, after hearing evidence as presented by the United States attorneys. If the grand jury wishes, the accused may be allowed to present evidence if he desires. Unless an indictment is returned, the Government is powerless to try a person for a felony. The grand jury may refer a case to the Municipal Court for trial as a misdemeanor. A defendant may, if he agrees to plead guilty, waive indictment in which case he is charged by an "information" in the District Court.

UNITED STATES COMMISSIONER: A committing magistrate, he is empowered to issue search and arrest warrants in criminal cases on the District Court's behalf, to arraign criminals and to decide whether to hold them for the grand jury. It is up to the investigating policeman to decide whether he will get his warrant from the United States Commissioner or from a Municipal Court judge. Federal agents, in practice, get their warrants from the Commissioner.

MUNICIPAL COURT OF APPEALS: This highest of the purely local tribunals in the District hears appeals from the Municipal Court and from the Juvenile Court. With certain exceptions, these appeals are a matter of right. The Appeals Court may, at its discretion, grant a review from the Small Claims Court (in Municipal Court) or from the criminal division of Municipal Court if the fine is less than $50.

MUNICIPAL COURTS: Here are tried civil suits where less than $3000 is involved and criminal cases where the maximum penalty allowed is a year or less in jail. Its 13 judges (three of them yet to be named to serve under recess appointments) issue warrants in virtually all misdemeanor cases and, if the investigating officer chooses, the judges may issue warrants in felony cases. Prisoners arrested by police without warrants generally are arraigned here.

If a prisoner brought before the municipal bench is charged with a felony, he will be held for grand jury action. If it is a misdemeanor, he will be tried in the Municipal Court.

The court's criminal division includes a Traffic Court, a criminal Jury Court, a D. C. branch where drunks, vagrants and other ordinance violators may be tried without a jury, and the United States branch where persons accused of other misdemeanors are tried without a jury, and where persons accused of felonies receive preliminary hearings.

The court's civil division has a Small Claims Court, where disputes of $50 or less are tried, and a Landlord and Tenant Court. There also are an Assignment Court and generally three courts to try civil cases, with or without juries.

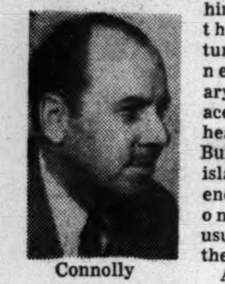
JUVENILE COURT: Children under 18 are tried here in closed proceedings. Children 16 to 18 accused of felonies may be sent to District Court, via the grand jury, for trial. Juvenile Court also handles cases of adults accused of contributing to the delinquency of a minor, paternity cases, adults arrested in Washington, who do not support their children, and violations of the child labor law. Trials of children are largely informal and are held only after investigations of the child's background are made by case workers.

Judge Bentley has been absent from the court on account of illness and Congress this year created a second judgeship. On the expiration of Miss Bentley's term in 1952, her judgeship is automatically abolished.

State Turns Back Clock For Doctor

By James P. Connolly

MARYLAND'S "indispensable man" has passed the retirement age, but Maryland hasn't passed the age of dependence on him. So when the Legislature meets next February, Dr. Horace E. Flack, head of the Bureau of Legislative Reference, will be on hand as usual, drafting the bills.



Connolly

As organizer and director of the bureau, a joint city and State agency, Dr. Flack has been drawing the bills for the Legislature since 1916 and the ordinances for the Baltimore City Council since 1907. Several years ago he estimated that he had written more than 25,000.

A rare combination of competence, courtesy and patient kindliness, he has been hailed at testimonial banquets as "the greatest man who ever came out of the hillbilly country of North Carolina," "individually the most useful man in Maryland" and "service personified."

This year he became 70, the compulsory retirement age under the city and State retirement system. But a bill exempting him went flying through the Legislature last winter and the City Solicitor also strained a point in his favor.

Grand Old Man

THE City Comptroller said at the time: "God help us if anything should happen to Dr. Flack." A State Senator asked: "What would the Legislature do without the services of this grand old man?" And Governor Lane, directing that the bill be drawn exempting him from retirement, said, "His services are almost indispensable."

There is hardly a member of the State administration, legislature, bar or bench who has not consulted him for information or assistance.

The bill exempting the good doctor from retirement is one of the few he didn't draw. It was drafted by the Attorney General.

A wiry figure for all his age, Dr. Flack likes to be active. Over a lifetime he has built up a comprehensive file of the legislative and administrative activities of his own and other States.

Much of the file's contents he carries in his head and at his fingertips. Friends marvel at his ability to answer offhand such questions as the salary of the Governor of South Dakota or the Arizona statute—regarding, say, stray cats.

Dr. Flack belittles this peculiar ability.

"I've been doing it so long that it has become second nature," he says.

Since the Legislative Council was created, he has been its secretary, research director and all-round adviser. On the side he has published Flack's Annotated Code, a list of all the Maryland State laws, together with court constructions, and he is one of two Baltimore contributors to the Encyclopedia Britannica. He wrote the article on Baltimore.

A Younger Edition

HOWEVER, it is not for his knowledge alone that Dr. Flack's colleagues hold him in admiration and affection. A former Attorney General attributed to him "the patience of Job." One of his testimonials was inspired by a stranger, impressed with his courtesy in consultation.

Few Fathom Main Issue In Election

By Benjamin Muse

TUESDAY will be a strange election day in Virginia. It will be strange because the only question actually to be decided is one which, even at this late date, few people profess to understand.

Muse

The formality of electing John S. Battle, L. Preston Collins and J. Lindsay Almond, jr., as Governor, lieutenant governor and attorney general, respectively, will, of course, be carried out, but the contest for State offices has been all but lost sight of in the efforts of proponents and opponents to explain a set of constitutional amendments which is offered for the voters' approval.

The campaign of Walter Johnson, Republican candidate for Governor, has itself been little more of late than a contribution to the debate over those amendments. The names of a third candidate for Governor, Clarke T. Robb, Socialist-Democrat, of Herndon, and a Socialist-Democratic candidate for attorney general, Sidney Moore of Portsmouth, will also appear on the ballot, as well as that of E. Thomas McGuire, Republican candidate for lieutenant governor. But these three gentlemen have scarcely been heard from in the way of a campaign.

There are contests for House of Delegates seats in 18 districts, including Arlington and Fairfax Counties, but not more than a dozen of these contests are fights in which the outcome is actually in doubt. The only serious decision that most voters will have to make is whether to vote "for" or "against" the Campbell amendments.

28 Weighty Pages

AND rarely in the history of this Commonwealth have the voters on the eve of an election been more completely in the dark as to the meaning of a question submitted to them for decision. The most that the general public knows about the proposed constitutional amendments is that they would repeal the poll tax and empower the General Assembly to place other restrictions on the right to vote. As the amendments cover 28 pages, which not one registered voter in a thousand has read, there is a widespread suspicion that they may have other, and possibly more mischievous, meanings, which only lawyers and politicians can understand.

What is apparent to many voters, however, is the alignment of leaders for or against the amendments, and that will have most to do with determing the way they vote.

Among those who have endorsed the amendments are such resounding names as those of Senators Byrd and Robertson, Governor Tuck, Candidate Battle and Congressman Howard W. Smith. It is noted at once, however, that these gentlemen are all of the innermost hierachy of the so-called "Byrd machine." It is a further striking fact that, as far as the writer has been able to observe, no one has spoken publicly for the amendments who is not unmistakably identified with that political organization. The task of leading the fight for the amendments fell to loyal Byrd man Attorney General Almond.

Hence, if you believe that the Byrd organization generally knows what it is doing, as many voters do—and you are sure that it hasn't just got a bear by the tail—you may be inclined to vote for the amendments on faith.

AFL and Amvets

ON RECORD AGAINST the amendments, on the other hand, are Francis Pickens Miller, Horace Edwards and Remmie Arnold, who together polled 181,186 out of 316,612 votes cast in the Democratic primary. Also against the amendments, and vociferously so, is the Republican nominee, Walter Johnson.

Active leader of the fight is Delegate Robert Whitehead, but Senator Lloyd M. Robinette cried out like a John the Baptist against the amendments when they slid through the General Assembly in 1946 and 1948 and has opposed them in season and out of season. The Virginia Department of Amvets and the executive board of the Virginia Federation of Labor have denounced the amendments.

Not only the "average voter," but many who have studied the 5000-word document, have arrived at conflicting interpretations of the amendments or are still baffled as to their exact meaning. The Virginia Council of Churches has recommended rejection "because of the general vagueness of the proposed amendments to the constitution of Virginia and the uncertainty of their meaning."

Virginian Found Shot To Death in His Store

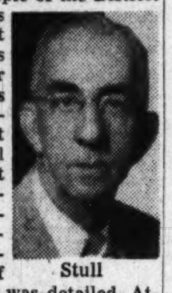
South Boston,, Va., Nov. 5 (AP).—James Edward Bass, 78, was found shot to death in the back of his store near Turbeville early this morning. He was shot twice through the chest by a .38-caliber pistol, police said.

After an investigation, Halifax County Coroner Dr. N. H. Wooding said it was a "murder case."

Tax-Exempt Property Study Begun by Senate Committee

By Harry N. Stull

A study of all tax-exempt property in the District has been begun by the Senate District Committee. The people of the District regard this as important. But not many years ago, a similar report was made to Congress. It set forth in detail all property not taxable — governmental, diplomatic, religious and educational. Use of such properties was detailed. Attention was specifically called to the number of special Congressional acts granting taxation immunity. So far as known, nothing substantial came of the investigation. It is to be hoped that the impending investigation will bring more tangible results. Many national organizations have their headquarters here. Because this city is the Nation's Capital, the tax load of the individual citizen is correspondingly increased every time one of these organizations is tax-exempt. A revision upward of the Federal Government's payment for Washington's upkeep should result from the facts disclosed.



Stull

Political Impotency

TUESDAY'S upcoming election again recalls Washington residents' political impotency and the many efforts already made to set up a ballot box in the District of Columbia. We can read with interest that our Virginia neighbors will decide upon a State constitutional amendment. We can only envy them as long as our affairs are directed by appointed individuals, and chartered by a Congress and a President in whose selection we had no choice. As the suffrage matter now stands, both political parties have included District suffrage in their platforms, the President of the United States has indorsed it, the Senate has passed the Kefauver bill, and the people have voted overwhelmingly in favor of it in two plebiscites. It is a sad commentary on legislative procedure that a few Congressmen have been able to pigeonhole the bill in the House of Representatives.

The case for national representation has been laid before Congress many times. It is regrettable that there is not more enthusiasm there for a constitutional amendment granting District suffrage on a national basis. The matter of local suffrage has received much greater congressional support. Congressional leaders of both parties support the Kefauver bill, on which extensive hearings were held by the House District Committee. A division of opinion among local residents over the kind of suffrage we want is not helpful to those Congressmen who are trying to give us something better than our present un-American setup.

Tax Alternatives

BUDGET Director Fowler's warning that the District must cut its spending or raise its taxes leaves District officials with two alternatives. Salary increases recently granted city employes have added greatly to government cost. They cannot be cut. Increased personnel and amount of capital expenditures are the major items left for consideration. Population increases and increased demands for public services inevitably lead to increased personnel, unless efficiency is to be impaired. Eventually, the question of increased capital outlay, without tax increases, will have to be faced by the District Commissioners. Any increased tax asked to care for capital outlay projects certainly will meet strong opposition from District residents. The pay-as-you-go policy cannot be continued indefinitely in the face of the growing necessity for capital outlays. It is regrettable that the Commissioners have taken steps to get a loan for these needs, a step that practically all the city's organized groups are demanding. Time merely adds to the burden.

Post-Halloween Sighs

MANY Washington residents will breathe a sigh of relief that another Halloween celebration has past. The Police and Fire Departments can again revert to normal conditions. Community organizations that staged parties to provide amusement and prevent adolescent acts of vandalism are to be congratulated. But they cannot be expected to reach all of the youngsters who roam the streets on this holiday. By no stretch of the imagination, however, can false fire alarms, the damage to automobiles and theft of household accessories be regarded as good, clean fun. Perhaps parental delinquency is in large measure responsible for these yearly occurrences. And this "trick or treat" business, which started out as a harmless and amusing diversion, is fast becoming a childhood hold-up game not at all amusing to the victims.

THE announcement that Wilbur S. Finch has severed his connection with the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace after a service of 28 years, and will engage in the practice of law here, will be of interest to his many friends. They have been associated with this distinguished civic leader in various civic movements, particularly efforts toward suffrage for the people of the District of Columbia. U. S. Cafeterias Serve 18 Millions, Up 10 Pct.

An increase of 10 percent in the number of persons served in 42 cafeterias of Government Services, Inc., in the first 40 weeks this year was reported yesterday by Robert R. Ayers, GSI general manager.

In the period, 18 million customers were served, compared with 16,200,000 in the same period of 1948. The average sale per customer this year, Ayers said, was 33.7 cents, which was virtually unchanged from the same period last year.

California Legislator Assails Governor Tuck's 'Distorted Viewpoint'

Los Angeles, Nov. 5 (AP).—California Assemblyman Vernon Kilpatrick said today Gov. William M. Tuck "embodied the most distorted and unpleasant social viewpoint I encountered during my visit to the handsome State of Virginia."

Governor Tuck said tonight that the "attitude and statements attributed to me" by Kilpatrick "are false."

The Governor, said the Californian, was "offering an apology for Virginia's officially admitted antique prison methods in the form of a personal attack on me."

Criticism of Virginia's prison system by Kilpatrick recently drew from Tuck a statement that he had no confidence in Kilpatrick and that he had referred the California legislator's name to the FBI.

Kilpatrick, chairman of the California Assembly's Interim Committee on Crime and Correction, said he was shocked by what he saw on his inspection of Virginia's prison system. He said Virginia prisoners were being treated on an animal basis—in the mistaken belief fear would breed obedience.

Here Are Basic Facts In Dispute Over Music

By Edward F. Ryan
Post Reporter

Here are some of the main facts in what is currently Washington's hottest civic controversy—the battle between those who approve and those who protest the broadcasting of radio programs in streetcars and buses in the District:

1. Many persons like the radio broadcasts, many persons do not like them. Just how many are on either side, and how many on neither, is a question. Studies made for Capital Transit indicated better than 75 percent positive approval of the radio, better than 90 percent not objecting, and a bloc of only 3 percent fixed in unyielding opposition.

Four-Day Hearing Held

2. The District Public Utilities Commission, having had a four-day public hearing on whether the radio plan accords with public convenience, comfort and safety, is now considering what will be its answer.

3. Capital Transit Co. contracts with Washington Transit Radio, Inc., to supply the radio installations at the radio firm's expense, while the program expense is borne by WWDC-FM.

4. Since February, when the first 10 vehicles were equipped with radios, the total has risen to 213 vehicles, and plans call for equipping 1500 vehicles, all that are suitable for it.

5. Programs are continuous from 7 a. m. to 7 p. m. Mondays through Saturdays. They include music from the library of Musak, news, weather, and time announcements, and commercials, and public service announcements. There is a 6-minute per hour overall limit on commercials, and a 35-second limit in practice on individual commercials. Announcements are not allowed to break into the music.

6. Washington is one of 14 major cities now having transit radio. The others are Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Baltimore, and Annapolis, Md.; Cincinnati, Ohio; Covington, Ky.; Worcester, Mass.; Houston, Tex.; St. Louis, Mo.; Takoma, Wash.; Des Moines, Iowa; Kansas City, Mo.; Jacksonville, Fla.; and Huntington, W. Va.

What CTC Gets

7. Capital Transit shares in advertising revenue through a sliding-scale percentage of WWDC-FM sales, but the payment so far has been the guaranteed minimum rate of $6 per month per radio-equipped vehicle.

8. Among major arguments of supporters of the radio setup are those: (1) most people enjoy it; (2) it is an additional source of income to CTC; (3) radio equipment in public vehicles will be of great value in times of emergency.

9. Among the major arguments of opponents of the radio setup are these: (1) it imposes forced listening upon a captive audience in violation of their personal liberties; (2) it is a threat to the health of those who don't like it; (3) it is a safety hazzard.

10. Capital Transit took particular pains to meet the safety hazzard charge. It presented figures to the PUC showing a favorable comparison of the accident rate in the first nine months this year with the same period last year.

It also presented figures just for the vehicles that now have radio, showing that since radio installation their accident rate had fallen to 8.81 per 100,000 miles as compared with a rate of 8.96 for the same period last year when they did not have radios.

11. The PUC record is filled with reargument and rebuttal of the major arguments on each side, the issue is likely to be taken to the courts.

Resignations Of 5 Accepted In Arlington

The resignations of five members of the Arlington Public Utilities Commission, submitted last week, were accepted, 3 to 2, yesterday by the County Board, after noisy political wrangling.

Democratic Board members, who have charged the resignations are a political move designed to "embarrass" Chairman Basil M. DeLashmutt on the eve of election, voted for acceptance. Nonpartisan members voted against it, after nonpartisan Daniel Dugan said he thought the board could "ill afford to spare the services of the five.

The board rejected, 3 to 2, a motion by Dugan that Commonwealth's Attorney Denman T. Rucker be required to consult with the board and the PUC before appointing further counsel in utiliies matters.

In a letter dated late in October, five out of six PUC members—Neil Foss, William G. Watt, Gustave A. Moe, Lawrence Knappen, and Albert A. Carretta—complained that appointment of Lester Conley, former PUC member, to represent the country in bus rate increase hearings, was "associated with the current political campaign."

Conley, after his appointment, issued a statement indorsing DeLashmutt's stand on public utilities matters.

Rucker, who made the Conley appointment, told the board yesterday that "if anyone had said one syllable against the qualifications of Conley, we would have something to talk about."

"If you bray like a jackass for Cox (nonpartisan County Board candidate Robert W. Cox) you're all right, is that it?" Rucker asked Dugan. "It's just as appropriate for Conley to support DeLashmutt as for you and Mrs. Cannon to support Cox," he concluded.

Mrs. Florence Cannon, nonpartisan member, said she did not object to Conley's qualifications, but that "there's a psychological factor involved" in bypassing the PUC in his appointment.

In other actions yesterday the board:

1. Heard complaints from more than 25 residents of the area near the Army's Arlington Hall reservation that Government workers there had created "acute parking conditions" by leaving their autos on the streets. The board directed County Manager A. T. Lundberg to investigate means of forcing workers to park within the reservation.

2. Heard complaints by a representative of the Parkway Citizens Association over delay in planned widening of Lorcum la. from N. Danville st. to Military rd. A public meeting with residents to dicuss final plans will be held at 8 p. m., November 15, in the courthouse, the group was told.

Rossini Named Carnegie Tech Chemistry Head

Dr. Frederick D. Rossini, internationally known Washington scientist, has been appointed head of the chemistry department at the Carnegie Institute of Technology in Pittsburgh.

Dr. Rossini

Dr. Rossini, now chief of the thermochemistry and hydrocarbons section of the National Bureau of Standards, will assume his new duties on July 1, 1950.

Dr. Rossini is a graduate of Carnegie Tech, and first alumnus to receive an honorary degree from the institution. He has served with the Bureau of Standards since 1928 and has occupied his present post since 1934.

He has lectured in the bureau's graduate school, and at Catholic and Howard Universities. He is author of more than 140 papers, and coauthor of two books.

Sidelights Enliven Battle Over Transit Music

How will the vote go in the balloting through The Washington Post on the issue of transit radio?

At least one proponent of the radio setup has a private bet down that the balloting will show a majority of votes against radio—and at least one opponent of radio has predicted the majority vote will favor radio.

Ben Strouse, vice president of WWDC-FM, which provides the transit programs, had this to say:

"The case of music-as-you-ride in street cars and buses has been presented to the Public Utilities Commission in an orderly manner. They are in full possession of the facts.

Operates in 15 Cities

"Transit radio is in operation in 15 cities. In 13 of these there have been no complaints. In only one other city has there been any furor, and that is a city where a newspaper with a selfish desire to deal a death blow to a young and healthy competitor for advertising has conducted an all-out campaign against transit radio. Yet, in that city, as in Washington, objective surveys have proven music-as-you-ride to be acceptable by an overwhelming majority of the public.

"In view of the consideration being given the matter by the Public Utilities Commission, it is, in our opinion, unethical to stimulate further controversy."

A Capital Transit spokesman declined comment on the ballot plan other than to say:

"The factual material concerning the reasons for Capital Transit installing music-as-you-ride in its streetcars and buses has been presented to the District Utilities Commission. Under the circumstances we do not consider it respectful toward that body to make further statements while the PUC has the matter under consideration."

Petition to Court

Bernard Tassler, who opposed radio broadcasts in streetcars and buses in recent hearings before the District Public Utilities Commission, reported he had petitioned the United States Supreme Court to order Capital Transit to end the broadcasts.

Tassler said, too, that he had notified the transit company he will sue for damages at the rate of $1 per minute for every minute he hears transit radio, unless the broadcasts are ended by Thursday.

Ernie Tannen, who runs a morning radio program on station WGAY, stopped by Friday to report his belief he has scopped The Washington Post on its own ballot about transit radio broadcasts.

Tannen's poll, which he calls a cross between Gallup and totem polls, predicted Truman's election and the hung jury in the Alger Hiss trial.

Yesterday's result on the question "Do you favor music in street cars or buses?" Tannen said was 27 persons for 3 against.

Before The Washington Post ballot was printed in today's issue, one effort had been made to cast a vote.

Wynson Light, 1327 E. Capitol st., sent in a postcard saying that his answer to the question "Do you favor radio broadcasts in streetcars and buses in Washington?" is "NO NO NO NO NO NO NO NO NO NO ad infinitum."

Miss Lynch Honored On Her Retirement

Soviet A-Blast Split Top U. S. Policy Thinking

By Alfred Friendly
Post Reporter

AT THE laying of the U. N. cornerstone 10 days ago in New York, President Truman declared that the United States is standing fast by the present U. N. international atomic control proposal.

That statement is somewhat less than the whole story; it is somewhat less than America's entire answer to the Russian atomic explosion. We may be resting on the control plan for the moment. But the moment passes.

The only other immediate United States response to the news of Russia's achievements was the announcement of steps for speeding up and substantially expanding our own production of A-bombs. But even among the people who are taking those steps, there was the deepest sort of doubts whether that immediate response should remain the ultimate, or even the major, response.

The fact is that since September 23, when Mr. Truman announced the Russian explosion, a series of old ideas and policies has been starting to come unstuck. A mass of rigidly fixed ideas is demanding reexamination.

A number of Federal officials, perhaps fearful of public panic or for other reasons, have hastened to declare that American policy has long since been framed in the firm expectation that Russia would discover how to use atomic energy for weapons. American representatives at the U. N. stoutly insist that the American proposals for atomic control were equally based on that expectation. Accordingly, no change is called for.

Counted on 1955

AS FAR as this reporter can determine, those statements are dust in the eyes. The Government did not really expect the Russian bomb until 1955 or 1956. And even a casual reader of the control plan, as proposed in 1946 by the Acheson-Lilienthal report and by Bernard M. Baruch at the U. N., can see it was framed for a situation in which for a long while America would have the knowledge and the bomb and Russia would not.

The difference between 1949 and 1955, or even 1952, is all the difference in the world.

So it is that policies which were thought to have been nailed down for two or three years—policies on the best route toward obtaining international control of atomic energy, policies on military preparedness and defense, policies on foreign affairs and foreign commitments—are being challenged.

The reconsideration, anguished and groping, is finally beginning to take place at the highest Government levels.

The Government, after one of the most delayed double-takes in history, seems to have realized what the September 23 announcement really said.

Such thinking as is being done, it must be admitted, is far too limited, both in the number of thinkers and the scope of the thoughts. But it is the beginning.

No answers have been reached or even approached. A point of reframing policy is months away. There is no clew as to what the results will be.

National policy, under the impact of a changed set of conditions, may be recemented firmly into its old form, either by design from deep consideration or by default, through a lack of deep reconsideration. Or there may emerge a new policy structure, with quite different architecture.

At this time, then, an inquirer can only report on some of the lines of thinking now being hesitantly pursued, without forecasting their future or judging their merit.

Thinking Out Loud

WHAT follows is a summary of ideas gleaned from interviews with more than a dozen top policy-making people, either Federal officials in high position, or important official advisers.

They remain anonymous for the obvious reason that they have progressed no further than the stage of private thinking out loud. They cannot be quoted by name as authors of notions which are as yet only notions, which they have not fully examined, much less embraced, and which they may never embrace.

Among them, there are three points of agreement:

1. In the foreseeable future, the Russians will not and probably cannot accept the present U. N. atomic control plan. It was indorsed in the U. N. General Assembly by all nations except the Soviet bloc.

2. To continue to stand adamant on that plan, and do nothing else to try to solve the atom problem directly or indirectly, is a fatal policy.

As one official put it, "To stay in that groove is to stay in a rut. The rut will become a trench, and the trench a grave."

3. To undertake a preventive war—to beat up on Russia before it accumulates enough bombs to beat up on us or the world—is about as abominable a "solution" as the human or diabolical mind can contrive.

A word to refresh memories on the nature of the U. N. control plan may be in order:

As it now stands, after the modifications of three years, it calls for the creation of an international atomic agency which would own, manage and operate all basic atomic facilities (except mines) in the world. It would have unlimited rights of inspection. It would make available to individual nations "nondangerous" amounts of atomic material for peaceful uses.

A treaty, creating the agency, would spell out beforehand the quotas of plants and materials allocated to each country. The treaty would limit, for all of them, the production of atomic explosives so that weapon-making would be impossible.

The United States and most of the big

Russia has easier targets than the United States in event of an atomic war with the west. The capitals of our European allies are only a hedge-hop from the Iron Curtain.

Dulles 'Rides Oregon Trail' in Bus; Lehman Limousines Around N' York

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

NEW YORK.—The "bus stop" campaign, revived after 20 years of disuse in New York elections, is on trial with the "Fair Deal" in the Senate race now rolling to a close.

New York Republicans are not only providing the first clear-cut test of the "welfare state." They may be deciding whether the bus, as a means of strategic campaign transportation, is here to stay. If they lose in the showdown Tuesday, it won't be because they failed to give it a thorough workout.

Senator John Foster Dulles, the No. 1 passenger, has practically lived in one for the past seven weeks.

Down the Mohawk Valley, into the southern tier and up through the Finger Lakes region, the bus bearing Dulles streamers and a compact campaign unit has carried his cause against the "all powerful state."

High into the Catskills, over the Adirondacks and into the north country the bus has rumbled, through 90 percent of the counties in New York.

Out of it steps not the striped-trousered, frock-tailed diplomat in a high hat most rural residents expect, but a dusty gent in a rumpled blue suit, seedy topcoat and road-worn fedora.

Country Store Chatter

THEN, hands in pockets or clutching lapels, he starts to talk. He doesn't fumble through printed texts or peep down at handwritten notes, because he speaks "off the cuff."

Some of the lines he has casually ad libbed in the informal manner of a country store bull session later got him into trouble, but his audiences, seldom large enough to warrant a full dress oration, listen attentively. Here is a man who is saying at least what he thinks.

Then Dulles warmly shakes hands all around, clambers back in his bus and is gone.

The bus itself is the symbol of this new de-glamorized edition of the Stassen-type "meet the people" campaign. Actually, except for the homely touches of the new lead man, the routine was lifted without change from Governor Thomas E. Dewey's one outstanding success against Stassen in Oregon. Dewey won that 1948 primary battle—by bus.

By coincidence or otherwise, Dulles headquarters in New York even retains a good luck memento of that success. The telephone number is Oregon 9-2000.

James G. Hagerty, Governor Dewey's former executive assistant, and some others who rode the rough Oregon trail with Dewey, are showing Senator Dulles how it's done. They include Jules Dulce, transportation secretary, and "Hi" Sheffer, high speed stenographer, who races to transcribe Dulles' rapid diction. Alvin Johnson, State Police sergeant who often accompanied Dewey around the State, goes along as Dulles' "security officer."

A 'Second Honeymoon'

MRS. DULLES shares a bus seat with the Senator, or moves back to make room for an important local dignitary. She tirelessly accompanies him to each platform, but prefers not to make a speech or take a bow.

Both actually appeared to be enjoying it. Their spirits brightened noticeably as they rolled through the Finger Lakes region, where both grew up and were wed.

Glancing out of the window at the autumn-brown hillsides, Dulles mused aloud:

"I grew up here as a boy. I always wanted to be a diplomat. Little did I think I'd come back here as a politician."

Win or lose, Dulles says he's coming back after the election for a vacation. He hopes the duck hunting is still good.

In contrast to the Dulles bus ride, former Governor Herbert H. Lehman, his Democratic rival for the Senate, in his two trips upstate and almost daily dashes around New York City, sticks to his tried and tested police-escorted limousines.

In New York City, where Lehman is concentrating, he covers as much ground and meets more people than Dulles. Upstate, Lehman can't always be sure who he will meet.

While the two were campaigning near each other in northern New York, Lehman was rolling so far ahead of schedule that he actually kept a Dulles date by mistake. A Republican band, waiting to receive Dulles, blared into music as Lehman's caravan rolled up. Not until the Lehman procession turned off on a side street was the error discovered.

In New York City, the adult population quickly spots his stocky figure and glistening bald head even when he is riding in a limousine. Here Lehman follows the same campaign routine that kept him in the Governor's chair for 10 years.

He uses prepared texts but can speak off the cuff, and some think he makes his best speeches when talking only from notes.

Both Lehman and Dulles are serious-minded and rarely ever crack wise. When too clever lines appear in his prepared text, Lehman tones them down. Some wisecracks slipped into some of Lehman's early speeches, however, leading to speculation on his "ghosts." Former Presidential script writers Samuel Rosenman and Robert Sherwood are believed to have some hand in his speeches.

Cries of "Hi, Governor" or "Senator" go up when Lehman arrives at East and West Side auditoriums he hasn't visited since his unsuccessful try for the Senate in 1946. That was the Democrats' fatal "meat shortage" year.

City audiences treat Lehman with respect. He's almost never heckled. At one West Side rally, however, a drunk interrupted his speech. The audience turned on the heckler and many cried, "Throw him out."

Lehman quieted the crowd, interceded for the heckler. Walking to the front of the stage, he said: "Everyone has a right to hear me talk—and I want to talk." The crowd cheered him, allowed the drunk to remain.

Harks Back to FDR

APART from the "bigot" and "lie" exchanges on the so-called "hidden issues," Lehman and Dulles make dispassionate presentations of their cases.

Lehman always boils it down to "Liberalism versus Reaction." A contemporary of Al Smith, Bob Wagner and Roosevelt, the former Governor likes to recite intimate details of their joint struggles for "progressive" measures in New York State.

He says he wants to go to the Senate to help round out the program they started.

Pinning the "reactionary" label on the GOP, Lehman always carefully distinguishes between Republican leaders and the GOP rank and file. He says rank and

Truman Rated Even Higher 'Year After'

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Reporter

IT IS just a year since President Truman came back to Washington after the great drama of the 1948 election.

He came back, no longer merely the political heir of Franklin D. Roosevelt but President in his own right, and got an affectionate welcome from 750,000 persons in this voteless city. Elated but not exultant, he had a grin for the "Crow Eaters" waving from The Washington Post Building as well as for the ecstatic folk with the "I Told You So" buttons. It was a day to be remembered.

How goes it with Mr. Truman now, a year afterward?

Well, his hair is grayer, but he still has an abundance of what his doctor calls "bounce." He still can wear out reporters in their thirties or forties who occasionally accept his challenge to go on an early morning walk. Aside from an increased confidence—something that ought to be expected in the circumstances—his White House associates see little change in the battle-scarred Missourian.

His political stock is high, higher perhaps than it was a year ago. The Democrats say this is so, and the Republicans don't try very hard to refute them.

A Halcyon Time

VICTOR HUNT HARDING, a veteran political scout, known on the Hill as "Cap," says he is convinced after a cross-country trip that Mr. Truman is stronger today than he was at this time in '48.

Cap is executive secretary and director of the Democratic National Congressional Committee. Looking ahead to the 1950 elections, he recently visited 28 States, traveling 9000 miles by auto.

"The situation in the country," he said the other day, "reminded me of the best days of Coolidge. Nobody seemed to be mad at anybody else. More people were working than ever worked before in peacetime. You understand, of course, that I am excepting situations brought on by the coal and steel strikes."

Harding said that the attitude of the ordinary citizen toward President Truman was that he was a man much like himself, the kind of fellow he would like to have living in his own block.

"It was altogether different from the days of President Roosevelt," Harding said. "People either worshiped Roosevelt as a god or looked on his as a sort of political devil."

He said they seemed to feel much closer to Mr. Truman, regarding him as a man who had come up the hard way and had gone through experiences much like their own.

T-Bone Barometer

IN HIS travels, Harding said, he dropped into all kinds of places—drug stores, meat markets, filling stations and so on—and made it a point never to reveal the nature of his mission. He spent most of his time, he said, just listening.

"I was really surprised," he said. "I never saw the situation so good for us in an off year. One thing that impressed me was the large number of top-flight men talking of running for Congress. Some of them were never identified with the Democratic Party before."

He said he was surprised, too, at what he encountered in meat markets. Often, he said, he overheard a housewife say to the butcher: "Is that the best you've got?" He said he couldn't recall one asking for cheaper cuts.

The used-car firms weren't doing so well, Harding said, but he pointed out that this was because so many Americans were out to buy new cars, in many cases higher priced models than they had owned before.

Such is the situation in the country a year after the Great Upset, as seen by a technician hired by President Truman's own political party. If it is too optimistic, the Democrats might have occasion to remember what happened to the over-optimistic Republicans a year ago.

Simple Explanation

WHAT happened in 1948—how Mr. Truman managed to win in the face of polls and betting odds that said he was going to lose—has been the subject of a vast literature in the year that has elapsed.

Those who were on the inside at Democratic National Headquarters still think the answer is simple rather than complex or mysterious. They think the answer is Harry Truman. They think he won the election with courage and hard work—won it with his down-to-earth oratory at the whistle stops, where he talked of food and shelter and something for a rainy day, the while he blasted the "do-nothing, good-for-nothing" Eightieth Congress.

Attorney General J. Howard McGrath, who was chairman of the Democratic National Committee in the '48 campaign, put it this way last week:

"There were many factors in the 1948 campaign without which we might have lost. However, without the President's whistle-stop campaign we surely would have lost."

The Question of '52

WHAT about 1952? Will Mr. Truman try for another four-year term?

That probably is something that only the future can answer. When the Truman Special was returning to Washington from Independence a year ago, one of the President's closest associates told newspapermen that Mr. Truman would not care for another term. He reminded them that in 1952 Mr. Truman would be 68.

Four months later, at a dinner of the White House Correspondents Association, Mr. Truman said something that seemed to confirm this. In an extemporaneous talk, he said he had come to like the White House—everything about it, he added, except the second floor, which was about to collapse.

"But we hope to have that remedied by 1952," he said, smiling, "so that the next man can go in without any trouble."

Last August he talked in somewhat the same vein. Addressing a group of teen-age girls, he said he could not make any appointments five years hence because "that is a year or two beyond the time when my term will expire."

At a White House news conference later that same day, a reporter remarked to the President that he hadn't sounded like a candidate for another term in '52.

Well, said Mr. Truman, that was the implication he had intended.

Asked specifically whether he planned to run again, Mr. Truman laughed and said he would answer the question when the time came. He added that he was not in a position to say, as Coolidge said, "I do not choose to run." Just what he meant by this was not clear.

At any rate, some of his intimates think he will "have" to run. Why? Well, they say to you, name somebody who could do better.

Looks like that "victory smile" you saw photographed at Union Station after last November's election, doesn't it? But it was made one year later, when President Truman boarded his special train last Wednesday for the Twin Cities and a speaking date. He hasn't really changed—a few more gray hairs, at most

Neglected Okinawa Getting Buildup as Pacific Gibraltar

By Allen Raymond

OKINAWA (NYHT).—The task of turning long-neglected Okinawa into an American "Gibraltar of the Orient" will be a tremendous one, and will take at least three years at the present accelerated rate, it was evident to correspondents who toured the island with Maj. Gen. Joseph R. Sheetz, new commander of the ground forces. Very little has been done for the occupation personnel in the past four years beyond trying to keep wartime installations from blowing away in periodic typhoons, and little enough for the Okinawans beyond supplementing the local food supply.

As a result, General Sheetz found when he arrived here October 1, the American personnel have had the highest venereal disease rate in the entire Army through contact with the primitive natives. A complete reorganization of the military government will be necessary if the natives are to be prepared for any real experiments in self-government. Gen. Douglas MacArthur, it was learned, is recruiting a complete new policy-making military government team of 67 high-salaried civilians.

Sheetz estimated that the island will receive about 75 million dollars in the coming year for construction of quarters for the ground and air forces. The building program now planned will have to be multiplied by three before the Americans are adequately housed.

High priority is being given to the construction of recreation buildings with theaters, clubs and gymnasiums, in view of the low morale of the troops. There is a complete lack of any recreational facility other than in the off-limits native villages. In August, the troops suffered from venereal disease at the rate of 388 per 1000. This had been cut to 212 per 1000 at the last report.

Technically, there has been a strict rule against fraternization with natives, but this is being modified slightly. A small shopping center will be set up on the island's one main highway, where Americans may buy native handicrafts legally. A tour of this new area revealed the natives to be in pitiful poverty with little to sell.

Very little has been done to cope with the natives' economic difficulties. The local currency is still valued at 50 yen to the dollar instead of the realistic 360 in Japan. The occupation forces have been hiring about 40,000 natives at wages theoretically averaging $10 to $15 monthly, but the natives have no goods for which to spend the little they earn and many have lived largely by stealing from the Americans. The black market flourishes and the only trade with nearby Formosa and Japan is smuggling—stolen American goods or unrefined sugar for a few luxuries from the neighboring lands.

THE INCURSIONS of the troops into the off-limits villages have been cause for violence, and anti-American harangues by street agitators are common. Intelligence reports show there is no real Communist activity in the Ryukyu Islands in the sense of a Marxian ideological movement. Authorities believe that even the rudiments of political thinking will have to be taught to this primitive people, used to centuries of domination by the Chinese or Japanese.

It is admitted that the population lives at a far lower scale than before the war, since the battle of Okinawa practically destroyed the main city, Naha, and thousands of homes through the countryside. No reconstruction is being undertaken for the natives, who used to live in solid brick or stone houses and are now living in thatched-roof hovels.

Accustomed to alien command, the population has not had the initiative or the means to do much for recovery under its own steam. The best that can be said for the Americans is that they maintain an 1800-calory diet for the natives by doling out cheap rice rations.

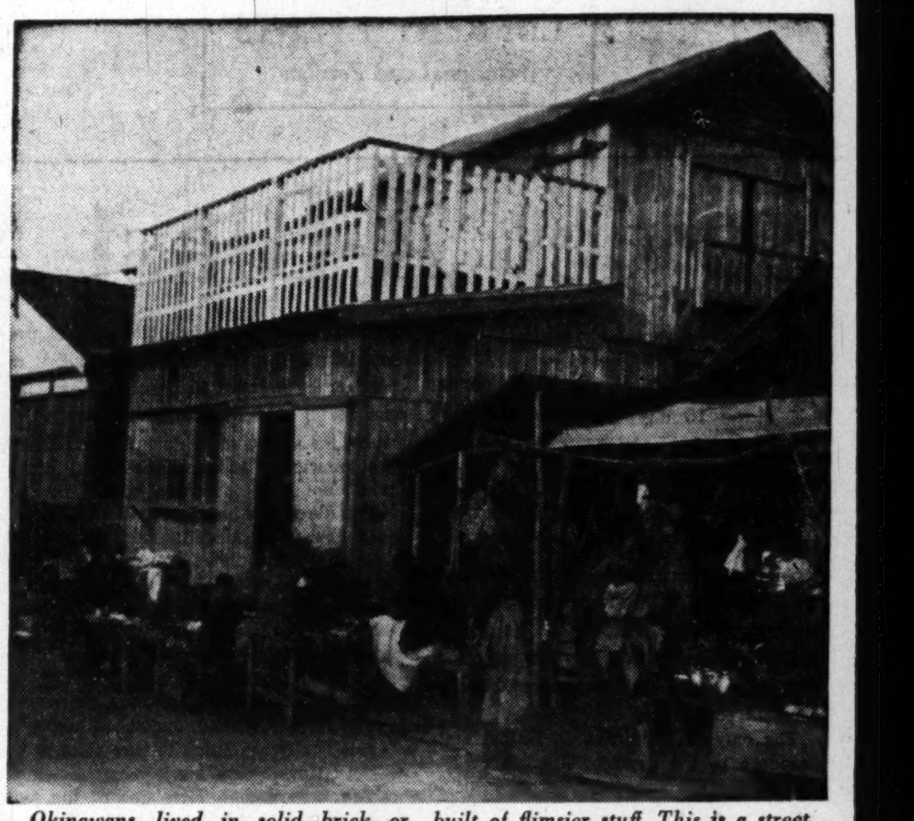
By dint of a 24-million-dollar congressional appropriation, the deplorable living conditions of the Air Force personnel should be nearly corrected by mid-1950. Typhoonproof barracks, shops, warehouses and officers' quarters will be constructed. Funds also have been allotted for the building of roads which will serve the Okinawan economy as well as the occupation forces. A new harbor will be dredged.

Altogether, there is new drive and energy on Okinawa, scarcely 500 miles from Communist-held Shanghai. Latest-model fighter planes engage in practice patrols around the clock. Right now, they merely keep track of the approach of planes of six commercial airlines which use Okinawa as a base, but they carry live ammunition.

The old quonset huts where the fighter pilots and their families have been living are getting new paint. But still there are the typhoons and the humidity. The dampness causes rust and mildew unless kept after constantly. Under such conditions, the top military leaders are proud of the record of the American women here.

After typhoon Gloria, which destroyed 92 of the 483 homes and damaged practically all of them last July, all dependents were offered an opportunity to go home if they wished. Only 12 wives out of nearly 500 accepted the offer.

Air Force authorities admit that the new typhoonproof quarters are going to be expensive. A single family unit cost about $40,000 in the last batch erected. It is planned to cut costs by importing more materials from Japan.



Okinawans lived in solid brick or stone houses that resisted the typhoons, until the American-Japanese fighting devastated their island. They have rebuilt of flimsier stuff. This is a street scene in "restored" Naha, the capital, showing the open market stalls, the natives' ancient way of doing business.

Will Our A-Bombs Ward Off Russia, or Force Us Into Preventive War?

powers in the U. N. atomic discussions are now convinced that Russia cannot accept such a scheme. A state which depends for operation and survival on the secret police system cannot tolerate the wide, almost limitless inspection powers which the international agency would have. Neither can it tolerate management and ownership by outsiders of a most important and growing industry, nor the great interchange of people implicit in the plan.

An occasional soul in the corridors of Lake Success argues that "if only Russia really understood" the U. N. plan, it would be more likely to accept it; that the USSR's present rejection stems from misinterpretation of the plan. But it is hard to believe that after literally hundreds of meetings and millions of printed words on the subject, Russian delegates do not understand it down to the last comma.

Two Main Divisions

EXCEPT for a final conclusion, unanimity ceases among the persons interviewed by this reporter beyond the three points mentioned above. The paths appear to fork into two main lines of thought. Each of these has many further splits.

One major group currently bases its thinking on the belief that the atomic bomb constitutes the most important and essential weapon of the United States and the Western democracies for the achievement of their national policies and their defense. It believes that America's goal for years to come must be great atomic superiority in both numbers and quality.

The other group is worried about this premise. It can conceive of the A-bomb as a bad weapon on which to rely for achievement of our aims. It fears that an atomic arms race, even if the United States stays ahead, inevitably means war. It believes that we could conceivably lose such a war. And even if we won it, we would probably emerge in about the social, political and economic status of Germany in 1945.

5-Year Arms Lead

WITH the warning that what follows are not conclusions, but only the most tentative and provisional sort of premises, here is the thinking of the first group:

1. Russia strives for the absorption of western Europe and probably the rest of the world into a Kremlin-controlled system. It hopes to achieve its aim through internal revolutions or coups in the Western nations. Failing that, it may nevertheless seek its goal by sheer military measures when it thinks it can get away with such action.

2. Its power in conventional armaments, particularly in the number of organized army divisions, has been and will be for at least 5 or 10 years vastly superior to the power of the West.

3. Russia has been deterred from taking over western Europe by the prospect of atomic retaliation from the United States.

4. That prospect still deters it, and will continue to do so for some years if America retains substantial atomic superiority. Russia, even though it will increase its stock of atomic bombs as the years go by, will face a powerful deterrent—possibly a decisive deterrent—to war by the knowledge that American bombs can destroy its industry and pretty well devastate the land.

5. Russia will not accept the control scheme now. Maybe it will years hence, when any number of conditions will have changed.

6. Nevertheless, we should stand by the plan as a goal. It is a moral and spiritual milestone which we should defend with pride and idealism.

7. A plan any less inclusive and secure than the present U. N. proposal is a dangerous delusion. A mere "Kellogg-Briand Pact," an agreement to outlaw the bomb, could give us security against atomic attack only if Russia could be trusted to keep its word. It can't.

8. That sort of pact, plus a limited inspection control plan, is equally futile. The nature of the atomic processes is so tricky that only limitless inspection plus international management and operation can prevent dangerous clandestine activity. Reliance on a "lesser" control plan would breed a false sense of security—the dangerous security enjoyed by the ostrich when his head is in the sand.

9. The United States can abandon its reliance on atomic superiority for keeping peace (or for winning a war if it comes) on only one condition. That is full agreement by Russia to the U. N. control plan. That would be such a tremendous step—at a minimum, toward lessening the utter destruction of an atomic war; at a maximum, toward achieving the international cooperation which itself creates peace—that it would be worth while to cut the bomb out of our armaments picture.

The second group, which doubts the efficacy of atomic superiority as a force either for peace or for winning a war, has been exploring the following lines of thought:

Whether or not American atomic superiority deterred Russia from a military onslaught in Europe in the past is of little interest.

In the future—say within three years—Russia can have a formidable supply of atomic bombs. They will be more than ample to destroy the centers of civilization in western Europe. Russia will doubtless find it easier to deliver them over Paris, London, Brussels and Rome than we will to deliver ours over the cities of the USSR.

We grossly underestimated Russia's technological and industrial ability. We must not make the same mistake again. We must assume that in a few years the Soviet will not only have the capability of destroying Europe atomically, but also many cities in America.

Confronted with either or both of these possibilities, and even if we had means to destroy Russian centers, would we face it? Would we try to annihilate Moscow if there were a strong chance that as a consequence London or Boston would be missing some days or hours later?

Could we expect any help from Western allies in a situation when France, for example, had the choice between accepting Russian terms or the obliteration of Paris, Lyons and Marseille?

In defending against atom attacks, would not Russia have the advantage? In a police state, hidden from all eyes and subject to absolute dictation, population dispersal in anticipation of an atomic deluge is infinitely more feasible than in any other nation.

A Powerful Remnant

RUSSIA'S unwillingness to use atomic bombs because of the fearful retaliation which could be expected cannot be counted on too heavily. If the USSR is led by power-crazy fanatics, it could conceivably accept a war if it knew that although it ended with only a few million Russians left alive, the rest of the world would be so shattered that it could not resist those few millions.

Furthermore, in the tense period preceding an outbreak of hostilities, might not Russia be in a better position to bluff?

If two cars, a Rolls-Royce and a jalopy, come heading for each other with each trying to force the other to swerve, the jalopy driver can hang on longer, having less to lose. In short, in risking an atomic war, the Russians may be in the position of not giving so much of a damn as we.

If this analysis holds water, the persons who make it can see the situation leading to the ultimate horror of America declaring a preventive war.

For, they say, if we place all our reliance in A-bombs and then discover one day that a year or 18 months hence Russia will be in a position to make frightful havoc with A-bombs itself, we will be helpless. There will be no time for any other measures. At that point, when the realization is clear and the menace only a year or so away, with no place else for us to turn, and in self-defense . . .

DAVID LILIENTHAL

DEAN ACHESON

. . . Two of the architects of the U. N. control plan

Dubious Reactions

THE officials and scientists who have been exploring this dark road are harassed with the thought that most of the actions we have taken since September 23 may have been wrong.

The President indicated we are taking a stand-pat position on the U. N. control plan and that it is up to someone else to suggest a better one.

Congress at once relieved the Atomic Energy Commission of a not entirely unwise or unwarranted limitation, so that it now can dash ahead to build new bomb facilities with a minimum of delay.

The AEC itself has announced a $300,000 expansion program.

All this adds up to a policy of reliance on the bomb, bigger and better and more and sooner. If that lulls America into a feeling of security, when there is no security in that approach, has it not been a criminal fraud?

From the line of thinking outlined above, further wrestling with the problem takes place on several different mats—almost as many as there are wrestlers.

One distinguished public servant, a scientist, is struggling with the melancholy idea that the situation may force the United States to abandon its commitments in Europe, to abandon the Atlantic Pact and to give up the cold war.

Not that he is convinced of it, but only because it must be spoken about to be analyzed, he suggests a whole new approach to negotiating with Russia in the faith that though the Politburo may comprise strange people, they may be basically reasonable. If they were relieved of fear and of threats, if they were granted many concessions, they might turn out to be folk with whom we could live, unthreatened and at peace.

This, he admits, sounds perilously close to a policy of appeasement, in which most of America has lost all faith. It also sounds very unlikely as a solution. Yet, unlikely as it is, the alternatives seem to him to lead to a certainty, the certainty of war.

Our Other Weapons

MOST of the other officials and scientists of the second group who were interviewed take a different view. They want to take a look at the thesis that the United States has many other weapons than the A-bomb with which to win a cold war, a hot war or a temperate peace.

The premises of the argument are these: America and western Europe have twice the population of Russia and it is infinitely more skilled and productive. Their combined industrial potential—for making a rich life in which communism cannot grow, or for waging a war—is 5 to 10 times that of the Soviet.

Therefore should we not plan to fight the cold war, and to defend Europe and ourselves, in a manner that offers some promise? Build up our military might and that of western Europe in a big way—and by no such pedestrian and timid approach as the present military assistance program, with only $1,300,000,000 at its disposal.

Build the economies of western Europe, so there will be steadily less opportunity for communism to grow or even survive without those nations. More Marshall Plan and more Point Four, in effect.

And above all, take concrete and truly promising steps toward a real Atlantic community, a bona fide partnership between American and European democracies.

Then Europe will be reinforced economically, militarily (some say with the A-bomb, some say without it) and spiritually. It will have firm and irresistible reasons for continuing its partnership, come what may. It will have real hope for a democratic future.

Then Russia can no longer count on Communist citadels within the European nations to do its job for it. And it will be much more hesitant to embark on a military conquest.

But any such approach may be impossible, these persons fear, as long as the United States continues to concentrate on A-bombs to the exclusion of significant action in other fields.

One outstanding American public figure gave as a metaphor a man trying to look at a distant horizon while a powerful electric light dangles in front of his eyes. Until it is removed he will not be able to see beyond it. Until we stop counting on the A-bomb we can build nothing else to count on.

'Reducing' the Menace

AT THIS point, views diverge once again. Some people believe we can proceed with the formation of new, bold policies while still standing firm on the present U. N. atomic control plan.

Others see possible value in exploring a "lesser" control plan.

Their idea is not that the "lesser" scheme could be foolproof, for they agree that the present U. N. plan is about the only airtight preventive against a surprise atomic attack and an immediate launching of big-scale atomic war. Rather, the goal would be a reduction of the size of the atomic menace and a gaining of time before atomic armaments grew overwhelming.

What form could such a plan take that would accomplish some good and that the Russians might possibly accept? So far in U. N. discussions the Russians have said they would agree to inspection (the form they proposed is grotesquely inadequate) and to a declaration outlawing the bomb.

As those proposals now stand, they are useless as bases for an adequate plan. But they might be bases for negotiation. In other words, some see a possibility of a scheme somewhere between the present U. N. plan and the Russian suggestions.

It could involve, it is argued, a much less onerous and extensive inspection procedure—a procedure which the MVD might conceivably be able to stand without seeing its whole system collapse.

The inspection might center at the mines where atomic ores are being brought to the surface. A limitation on the amount of mining would be fixed at a low level, permitting only enough production for experimental purposes. Not enough would be allowed to permit the amassing of sizable supplies of fissionable material.

This arrangement would not prevent some illicit manufacture and consequent surprise use of a few atomic bombs. But, it is argued, it would not permit a very large diversion of nuclear fuel into bombs. A cheater might stash away each year enough for a couple, or half a dozen, but not enough to count on atom bombs as the dominant or important weapon in his military arsenal.

The argument here is whether such a lesser scheme would really do that—or whether it would permit a very large clandestine operation. In this, only the scientists and technicians can give a definitive answer. The idea has not yet been worked out anywhere near the point where a final answer is possible.

If it were determined that it was a feasible plan, it might provide a substantial easing of tension and create a climate in which further negotiations with the Russians could bear fruit. In any event, it might provide more time and a subject on which atomic talks could continue. And time and further talks seem at the moment to be desirable ends in themselves.

But the plan raises almost as many problems as it answers.

Assuming that the Russians would accept some such system, would the Americans? Would Congress be wise to give up reliance on our atomic superiority for something far less than an airtight control system?

What would be done about the American stockpile of bombs and atomic explosives? What conditions would the Russians demand to effect equalization, inasmuch as our stockpile is for the time being larger than theirs?

Finally, as mentioned above, would it work? Is the state of atomic "accounting" advanced to the point where limited inspection would hold down clandestine activity and other cheating to a tolerable maximum?

Rumors were current last week that the Canadian delegation to the U. N. was about to toss the idea of a "lesser" plan into the hopper for discussion. The Canadians categorically and for the record deny any such intent.

It appears that some weeks ago they were exploring the possibility of suggesting an agreement to outlaw use of the bomb, but now they seem to have abandoned even this.

A Basic Change

THIS welter of uncertain, provisional and contradictory ideas begins from some small points of unanimity. It ends on another.

That is a conviction that the problem of the atom cannot be solved at the level of the atom. It cannot be solved within any framework confined only to consideration of atomic war and bombs and controls.

Debate and tentative solutions of some problems of atomic controls may be helpful. So would an atomic "truce," and also a new look at the role of the A-bomb in our military and foreign policy.

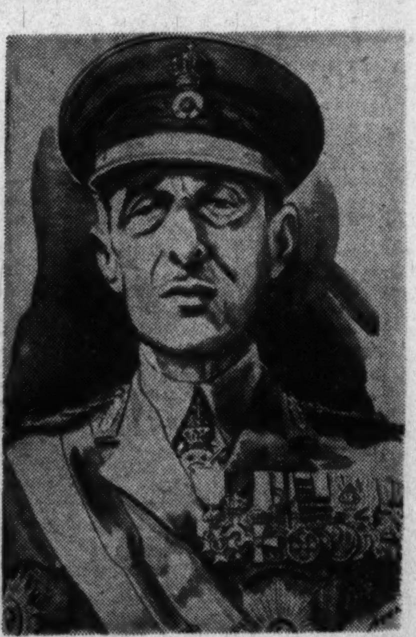
But the real solution, whatever it may be, can only come from deliberation and action and policy on a higher, broader level. There is recognition of this to some degree in the Government—the State Department, the AEC, Congress and U. N. offices.

But this is cold comfort. For despite the recognition, there is precious little action. Entirely too few people seem to have addressed themselves directly to the fact that a situation has changed, a basic premise has been knocked galley-west.

A widely held determination to tackle a new situation head-on and the inspiration with which to do it have yet to emerge.

Greek War Hero Papagos Has Political Foes, U. S. Friends

By L. S. Chakales



MARSHAL ALEXANDER PAPAGOS

. . . Sketch by AP Artist H. E. Munhc

ATHENS.—Greece is groping toward a general election in the spring with the word "dictatorship" bobbing up often in spoken and written speculation.

When the Greek situation was darkest—in 1947 before President Truman announced his doctrine to contain Communism, and again in 1948 when an army offensive against rebel guerillas fizzled into a draw—both Liberal and Royalist politicians privately said a "strong man" was needed to lead the country.

However, as is the case always in Greece, there were at least a score of such "strong men" who insisted they, and only they, could lead the country out of its misery. They never agreed on one.

But last January the freightened politicians lured Marshal Alexander Papagos out of his palace sinecure as grand chamberlain, giving him complete authority over the armed forces. Papagos, Greece's greatest living military hero, achieved his fame as generalissimo when the Greek army threw back the Italian invasion from Albania early in World War II.

With that control, plus a stringent military censorship that prevented even political speculation concerning the guerilla uprising and the control of courts martial, Papagos is the strongest man in Greece.

The marshal has fired, retired and shifted his generals and officers around so that he is assured of personal loyalty in every key position.

Government Backed Down

FRIENDS of Papagos insist the former chief of staff under Dictator Metaxas has no notions of seizing control of the country. This is echoed by members of the American Embassy who should be well-informed.

Lieut. Gen. James A. Van Fleet, chief of the American mission, who has great respect for Papagos as a military leader, does not believe he has any such intentions. High British officials say the same thing.

However, veteran Greek politicians unfriendly to the marshal insist he has too much power. They recall revolutions, coups d'etat and seizures of government that started with considerably less influence than Papagos commands.

There is an old saying in Greece that you must have either the palace or the army to seize the government successfully. Papagos has access to both.

In two recent collisions with the civil government, the 67-year-old hero of the Italian campaign won both times, although he compromised later.

Prime Minister Alexander Diomedes announced a program of leniency was being worked out for repentant guerillas. Four days later he announced it had been abandoned, and political circles knew Papagos had voiced opposition.

Shortly afterward, it was announced that courts martial death sentences would be reviewed by a civilian pardons board before executions were carried out. Again Papagos went into action and the following day this was denied.

When suspension of executions and review was insisted upon, Papagos agreed, but specified that the pardons board must act within two weeks. This was regarded as a compromise, but observers pointed out that the slowness of Greek civil action precluded any appreciable number of decisions within the specified two weeks unless scores of pardons boards were established. They haven't been.

The leniency program was finally adopted because when Greek U. N. delegates reached Lake Success, they were persuaded by the Americans and British that it made a better front against Soviet accusations.

Dollars a Deterrent

THE sharpest critics of Papagos, most of whom are in the Liberal Party, term him a political Franco. Realists, however, point out that if Papagos had such ambitions, he wouldn't have a chance. That's because of American dollars.

If the dollars hadn't been poured into Greece, she likely would be under Russia control today. The United States could no countenance dictatorship in Greece.

The Americans are quite happy with Papagos. His army of 200,000 is one of the best equipped and most experienced in continental Europe outside the Iron Curtain. If a shooting war comes before the Atlantic Pact nations get organized militarily, this tough little army will be of substantial help to the West.

Papagos is going to be felt in the coming elections. Just what shape his influence will take is anybody's guess. But it's a cinch he isn't going to let his triumph over the Communist guerillas go to pot because some politicians see appeasement as a way to get more votes.

It isnt 'likely there will be any compromises, political or military, with the Reds as long as Papagos runs the army, navy and air force.

Anti-Semitism Flares Again In Germany's Bonn Republic

By Ernest Leiser

BERLIN (ONA).—Leaders in western Germany's few remaining Jewish communities report that, since the formation of the West German Republic, there has been a marked growth of nti-Semitic activity among the German population.

Their account of increasing vert incidents, and even more erious clandestine anti-Semitic ctivity, has been conveyed to fficials on the United States igh Commission. The latter have promised a thorough investigation.

For a considerable period prior o the creation of the Bonn Republic, most responsible Jewish spokesmen in the western zones had expressed the view that, althought there had been no encouraging decline in anti-Semitism among the Germans, neither had there been important signs of any rise.

Coincident with the establishment of limited autonomy for the Germans, however, Jewish leaders began receiving increasing information of discrimination, abuse and occasional outright attack on Jews in the western zones.

Two conspicuous examples have been called to public attention. The first was an attempt by the city executive of Offenbach, in Hesse, to bar a Jewish doctor from the post of town gynecologist. The second was the receipt by federal and state officials throughout the western zones of thousands of strongly anti-Semitic, anti-occupation, pro-Nazi letters.

Perhaps most disturbing are reports of new clandestine groups arising in a number of western zone cities, extremely nationalistic in outlook and violently anti-Semitic in their appeals to "throw out the Jews who are squatting in our midst, plotting revenge." One such group has won a considerable following in the town of Wolfsburg, in the British zone, and two others in Hamburg, British zone, and Kassel, United States zone.

Jewish leaders have expressed hopes that Allied representatives will step in to check the upsurge in anti-Semitism, or will at least exert strong pressure on the German government to act decisively against any new manifestations.

There is some doubt as to the extent of Allied intervention now possible, since prohibition of anti-Semitic activity is not a power reserved to the High Commission under the occupation statute.

Jewish spokesmen argue, however, that such activity constitutes a threat to the "prestige and security" of the Allies and therefore comes within their province.

Soviet 'Short-Changing' Forced Tito to Turn West

By Frank Gervasi
Post Reporter

BELGRADE.—Look deeply into any major political action—a revolution, a war, a Marshall Plan—and you are certain to find economic reasons for it.

Yugoslavia's break with Russia, certainly one of the most important political developments of the postwar era, is not an exception, although at first glance ideologies and not decimal points might seem paramount.

Tito split with Stalin because the latter tried to boss Yugoslavia's internal affairs and attempted to dictate the country's foreign policy. That is the story in the headlines, and it is true. But it is equally true that ever since World War II Yugoslavia has been behind a large and seemingly immovable economic eight ball. And Russia put her there.

Yugoslavia got out of the Soviet satellite system at least as much because Russia failed to keep economic bargains as because Moscow failed to fulfill political ones. The break between Belgrade and Moscow might never have come had Russia provided Yugoslavia with the raw materials and machinery it needed for recovery.

Had it not been for $424,800,000 in UNRRA "plasma," Yugoslavia might well have died from loss of economic blood.

Huge Manpower Loss

THIS is probably as good a place as any to recapitulate what the war did to Yugoslavia. The figures might help you better to appreciate the country's present plight and, perhaps, the progress it has made toward recovery despite the lack of Marshall aid and, until recently, of dollar loans.

The country lost, according to the best available estimates, 1,700,000 inhabitants, of whom there were 15,900,000 as of 1941. Most of the dead were men. Of all the countries on our side in World War II, only Poland suffered greater manpower losses, proportionately speaking.

The war destroyed 1200 out of 2200 of the country's locomotives, 3000 out of 5000 passenger cars, 30,000 out of 53,000 freight cars. From 40 to 60 percent of the trackage, signal stations, turntables, bridges, viaducts and other equipment was wrecked.

A sixth of Yugoslavia's housing was demolished. In the rural areas, 310,000 buildings were destroyed; in the towns, 100,000.

From 40 to 60 percent of all of Yugoslavia's horses, cattle, sheep, goats, hogs and poultry were destroyed, stolen or slaughtered for food by the enemy or the hungry peasants. Beef and pork were among Yugoslavia's principal prewar agricultural exports. Today Yugoslavia must import meat, milk and animal fats if it is to raise the level of what is now a bare subsistence diet.

The war wiped out Yugoslavia's 15,000 automobiles and 6000 trucks and buses; it sent to the bottom more than half of the 410,000 tons of merchant shipping and about two-thirds of the fishing fleet; it reduced the productive capacity of the lumber industry by one-fifth and that of the chief export industry, nonferrous metals, by at least 15 percent; it cut coal production by 60 percent; it reduced petroleum production, never enough to cover more than 20 percent of the country's needs, to zero.

AT the war's end, in other words, Yugoslavia was about as close to being economically dead as a nation can get. UNRRA revived it, and the letters continue to carry magic connotations for Yugoslavs despite four years of Kremlin propaganda against "western imperialism."

You see UNRRA trucks on the roads, UNRRA locomotives on the railroads, UNRRA tractors in the fields and UNRRA milling machines, lathes, planers, drill presses and stamping mills in the new factories. In Otachatz one night, I slept in a workers' inn on an UNRRA bed under UNRRA blankets.

Said Joe Bennick of Oregon, who returned to his native Yugoslavia in 1947 with some 15,000 other Yugoslav-Americans to "help Tito rebuild the motherland":

"These people will never forget UNRRA. They know that America footed most of the bill. Nobody will ever convince them that Americans are a lot of grabbing imperialists."

Yugoslavia is one of the few countries which have honored the rule that if UNRRA machines or vehicles are repainted, the UNRRA letters be stenciled back on again. This is evidence not only of characteristic Yugoslav respect for agreements but also a reflection of widespread pro-Western sentiment.

Until Yugoslavia fell into the Soviet orbit, largely as a result of the Yalta agreements, the west was this country's best customer and principal supplier.

Before the war, Yugoslavia exported fruits, wines, tobacco, nonferrous metals, timber and livestock. It imported petroleum, coke, cotton, trucks and tractors, locomotives, machinery and all kinds of manufactured goods. Its principal customers were Austria, Germany, Italy, Czechoslovakia, France, the British Commonwealth and the United States. Its chief suppliers were Germany, Czechoslovakia, Britain and the United States.

The war knocked out Germany, Austria and Italy as markets and, to a great extent, Czechoslovakia as a supplier. UNRRA provided a substantial portion of Yugoslavia's normal imports, plus a lot of food and medicines, in 1945, 1946 and the first half of 1947. From then on, the Soviet Union and the satellite states were to have replaced the western countries both as customers and suppliers. The Five Year Plan was launched with the intention of industrializing Yugoslavia and making it less dependent on the west than in the prewar scheme of things.

A One-Way Operation

BUT Yugoslavia found economic life in the Communist world extremely difficult. The promised Soviet tractors, threshers and industrial machinery failed to materialize. Russia sent plenty of tanks, but no trucks. Czechoslovakia sent an abundance of jeep-like scout cars for the Yugoslav army and some trucks and buses, but no spare parts. Czech oil drilling machinery arrived without motors and drill bits.

Meanwhile, Yugoslavia sent to the USSR and eastern European countries from 60 to 90 percent of its entire mineral output. Long before the break between Belgrade and Moscow in June, 1948, it had become obvious to Tito and his Marxist economists that they had made a bad bargain.

The looked-for cotton from Russia did not come. Neither did the oil from Romania. The ambitious Five Year Plan was saved only by overproduction of timber, at the neglect of agriculture and at the cost of a continued low standard of living. The timber was sold for sterling and dollars with which Yugoslavia could buy cotton, wool and petroleum.

Somewhere along the way, Tito must have realized that Yugoslavia's economy simply did not complement Russia's and that it could not be fitted into the Soviet economic pattern. When the Soviet Union and its satellites imposed a blockade against Yugoslavia, an act which really merely formalized existing conditions, Tito turned to the west for help.

Yugoslavia's inability to obtain capital goods has imposed on the country—at least on its city dwellers—a standard of living lower than any in western Europe. The country has been obliged to concentrate on production of machinery and salable raw materials at the expense of agricultural development and production of even the most necessary consumer items.

It is virtually impossible to buy a comb, a pair of shoestrings, a tube of toothpaste, a razor blade, a pad of writing paper or a cake of toilet soap in Belgrade, Zagreb, Sarajevo or any of the major cities. Workers live in unheated houses and subsist on cabbage soup made, when it can be had, with a bit of fat back. The only decent meals they get are in the workers' messes, but there are not enough of these to feed all the workers.

A Popular Decision

YET, in spite of discomfort, hardship and even outright hunger, there is no indication that the Yugoslavs are ready to overthrow Tito. They had a choice—Tito or the Kremlin. They have obviously chosen to string along with Tito. The most popular single act of the Tito regime, according to such expressions as I was able to gather in a one-month stay in this country, was its defiance of the Kremlin.

While Tito was in economic difficulties long before the split with Stalin, the Soviet blockade has undoubtedly complicated his troubles. Competent western observers believe that the next 18 months to two years will be Tito's most difficult. If he survives them, Yugoslavia will be well on the way toward recovery and toward a higher standard of living which may eventually mean relaxation of police state oppressions.

U.N.R.R.A.
SUPPLIES FOR YUGOSLAVIA

One of the 40 Yugoslav soldiers detailed to guard a trainload of UNRRA wheat and other cargo in 1946. UNRRA won a reputation for the United States that has not been sullied by Kremlin propaganda. When UNRRA vehicles are repainted, the Yugoslavs also restencil the agency's initials.

Yugoslavia may never abandon its socialism. But what hopes its 16 million fundamentally freedom-loving people have of a better and freer life rest almost entirely with the west. They, as we shall see in a subsequent piece, are willing and able to do their part. In the proportion that America, and to a lesser extent Britain and Canada, supply Yugoslavia with machinery and above all the credits with which it can salvage its economy, Yugoslavia will resist Soviet imperialism.

Should that help from the west fail, Yugoslavia may be obliged to capitulate to the Kremlin, overthrow Tito and become a Soviet satellite—but only after bloody resistance with its ever-present danger of igniting another world war.

U. S.-Armed Turks Guard Red Border

Edwin B. Greenwald, chief of bureau for the Associated Press in Istanbul, has just completed a tour over most of Turkey, particularly the tense eastern area along the Russian frontier.

By Edwin B. Greenwald

ISTANBUL, TURKEY.—With American mechanized equipment, Turkey's armies stand alert today on their 250-mile Russian border, "every man ready to fight until he belongs to Allah."

I have just returned from a tour of the frontier in the east where garrisoned troops watch and wait, unafraid of their ancient enemy.

They stand along the Black Sea and at mountain posts. They are symbols of Turkey's will to fight rather than yield to a single Russian demand.

Kars is the coveted city. It sits only 30 miles from the frontier, commanding a plateau that rolls out of the Caucasus and sweeps west into Turkey.

They say 258 wars have raged through and around Kars in the past 4000 years. Nearly all of them came out of the East. Kars is still a frontier prize.

Russia has claimed frequently in threatening terms that Kars and the two provinces of Ardahan and Artvin rightfully belong to the Soviet Union. There has been tension between the two countries over this claim since March, 1945.

A Czarist Conquest

THE LAST conqueror of Kars was Czar Nicholas I, who occupied much of eastern Turkey after the Turko-Russian War of 1878. The Russians finally pulled out and left some Armenians to hold on. The Turks took care of the Armenians and the present frontier was reestablished in a treaty in 1921.

Kars once was the headquarters for the Eastern Defense Armies, but two years ago these were withdrawn westward to Erzurum. Militarily, Kars now is only a well-manned outpost.

Erzurum is the eastern bastion of Turkey's military might. It is headquarters of the Third Army, which has one job only: Watching Russia, 150 miles to the east.

Watching and waiting, it has molded virtually a new army around equipment and training provided by the United States under the Military Aid Program. A crack armored brigade is expertly commanded. Its tanks, artillery and mechanized infantry equipment are 100 percent American. Row after row of M-24 and M-36 tanks have replaced old British Valentines that serve now only for target practice.

A group of American officers, after watching a complicated maneuver which used live ammunition, artillery, tanks and infantry, said the maneuver, on the whole, was executed perfectly.

Col. Louis A. Hammack, chief of the armored section of the American mission, says the Turks rapidly learned operation of the new equipment on the field and through instruction courses at American Army posts. Technical schools drilled them in maintenance.

At Trabzon, on the Black Sea, where Russians came ashore only 30-odd years ago in their last invasion of Turkey, American equipment lies ready.

Planes and Subs

THERE'S A LOT going on this side of the Russian frontier. New roads, designed to handle heavy tanks and armor, cover old camel trails. Harbors are being built at two vital Black Sea ports. American war planes, piloted by American-trained Turks, zoom from new airfields. Submarines and destroyers from the United States churn through the Sea of Marmora. There are machine shops to maintain all this equipment.

At the front, the scene is quieter but no less serious. The visitor cannot escape a vague, instinctive nervousness.

Although Turkey has a common front of some 250 miles with Russia, it is 30 miles east of Kars that she finds her greatest concern. There the plateau spreads between two mountain ridges and feeds westward into Turkey. Elsewhere the frontier is so mountainous as to be a natural barrier.

Troops of the small Turkish garrison on the plateau border, stationed 500 yards back from the frontier, idled openly. But save for two who changed guard in a tower across the border, not a Russian soldier showed himself.

Once in a while, to break the monotony of so desolate a post, the Turks do a bit of drilling. Each time they do, they know the Russians will do the same thing the next day. On some days, as many as 100 planes will rise in a single flight from a Russian airfield behind the hills.

"They like to show off where we can see it," a private remarked.

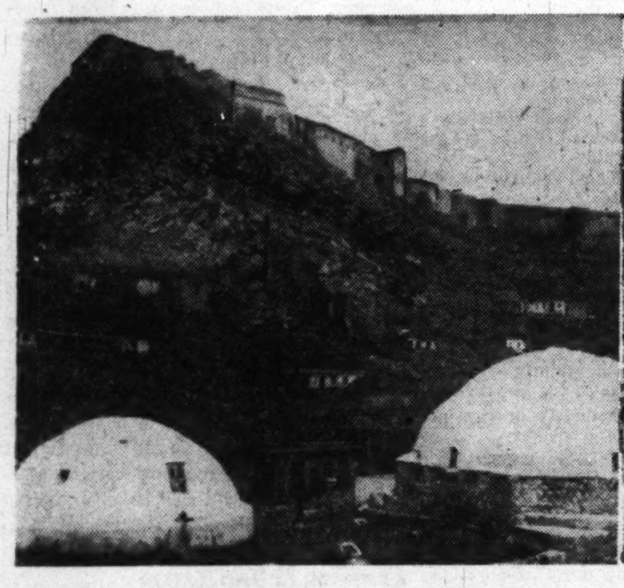
Conferences Cordial

RELATIONS between the two countries outwardly are tranquil at the border. Frequent protocol conferences go off with mutual cordiality, whether on Russian or Turkish soil.

On the Black Sea, just east of the seaside border village of Hopa, there is a little white school house by the brook. Across the brook is a box for a Russian guard. They say that except for this guard you never see a Russian. But the Russians are there.

Shefki Bey, the unofficial mayor of Hopa, knows the score. He did more than his bit in Átaturk's war of independence. He says:

"Afraid of Russia? There's not a man along these shores who is afraid. If war comes, it comes. These mountains can swallow our women and children in minutes. But on the beaches will be every man ready to fight until he belongs to Allah. You must die sometime!"



The castle of Kars, 30 miles from the Russian frontier, never has been captured by assault. The city of Kars, commanding a strategic plateau, is a coveted prize.

Reds Bend All Forms of Art To People's Indoctrination

By Edwin D. Gritz
Post Reporter

SOVIET efforts to make every aspect of "culture" serve communism are reaching almost unbelievable heights.

An avalanche of books, plays, poems and musical compositions—all politically pointed—seems to have swept the land in the past year, forcing many observers here to recalculate these so-called cultural operations in terms of a major ideological threat.

While it has long been known that Soviet writers and artists are directly "guided" by the Communist Party, only recently has this guidance become a reported all-out action to make every citizen see and hear only those presentations which laud the USSR.

One phase of this intensified intellectual approach to Bolshevism is indirectly revealed in an editorial printed by Pravda two weeks ago. The official party organ said in part:

"The Soviet book is faithfully serving in the building up of Communist society. It helps the party and the Soviet state to educate the working people in the spirit of communism, and it is a powerful Bolshevik weapon in the struggle against the degenerate bourgeois ideology.

"The duty of the party, trade union and Komsomol organization, of all the workers of the cultural front, is to care in a Bolshevik way for the needs and demands of the Soviet reader, to propagandize the best books, and to disseminate them among all classes."

Ivory Tower Falls

AS for the philosophy behind the Kremlin's cultural campaign, one of the clearest and most recent expressions of it was presented in Paris last summer by Alexander Fadeyev, regenerated author of "Molodaya Gvardiya" (Young Guard), who dutifully revised his book shortly after publication in 1945 because the war exploits of his young Communist heroes made old-line party leaders appear inept. Fadeyev, now regarded as leading literary politician, said at that time:

"We Soviet writers regard literature not as a pampered creature dwelling in an ivory tower, but as a teacher of life and an educator of the people."

As for charges that the party "interferes" with literary expression, Fadeyev first pointed out that the party could hardly be called an interference since it represents "the best and highest that the people have been able to advance to in the past . . . 30-odd years of the construction of socialism."

The party does, of course, guard against "tendencies alien to the spirit of the Soviet people," Fadayev admitted, but in those cases "the party points these things out truthfully and straightforwardly, reminding the writers of their high duty to the people . . . and pointing out . . . the splendid prospects of artistic fulfillment."

The party's vigilance against alien literary tendencies has been rewarded by a burst of literature lauding the Soviets and practically deifying Stalin. The spirit of this new literature is indicated by such examples chosen at random as the novels, "For the Power of the Soviets," about partisan heroics in the war; "Sun of the Steppe," about the virtues of "free labor" on collective farms, and "Back Home," about the Soviet people's triumphant postwar struggle for greatness.

Sublime Comparison

EVEN LOVERS, like Comrade Voropayev in "Happiness," are mindful of political proprieties in such ardent expressions of love as: "To me, love is an event determining the course of my life, like entering the party . . ."

As for the Russian version of the eternal triangle, a Soviet commentator on the novel "Four Springs" tells about Polina and Sasha, who are in love, as anyone can see. . . .

"But Sasha has a wife and Polina a family, and they have to find the strength to turn their backs on the happiness that might turn out to be unhappiness for others. The love of Sasha and Polina turns into a healthy, chaste friendship. . . ."

Not the least of the Kremlin's current concerns is the theater, which last week drew a special announcement from an arts official in the USSR Council of Ministers saying that the total attendance in Soviet theaters last season was 55,500,000. This figure, the official declared, is expected to be considerably exceeded this season. More than 4000 premieres are scheduled, it was announced, in addition to the repertory productions.

The announcement also revealed that 80 million rubles has been allocated for the construction of new theaters.

Soviet leaders are also said to be making a special effort to supplement existing cinema facilities with continuous movie programs in social and workers' clubs. One report reveals that trade unions have assigned more than two billion rubles out of their own budgets for cultural work in 1949 with a good part of it directed for cinemas, which are declared "one of the most important means of Communist education."

No exception to the new political scriptures in the arts is the Soviet ballet. An official account of the revived popularity of this form of artistic expression calls attention to the fact that the Soviet ballet today "has preserved the great tradition of Russian classical ballet and enriched it with socialist realism."

COMPOSER DMITRI SHOSTAKOVICH
. . . A little joke on the U. N.

In music, the Kremlin has not only purged or reindoctrinated both composers and musicians but has also made it mandatory for program directors to precede all presentations with some kind of musical offering in honor of the state. This musical gesture, it is said, has become a dreary ritual which Russian citizens privately characterize as "to chto nado," meaning that which is necessary but not exactly enjoyable.

Musicians and composers find, however that they must conform and even please their masters or lose existence in the eyes of the socialist government. With such a thought in mind, it becomes easy to understand the still generally unknown musical hoax perpetrated on the United Nations by Dmitri Shostakovich, another regenerated Soviet favorite.

Shostakovich, it seems, wrote a warmly received hymn of the United Nations which long after was accidentally discovered to be a camouflaged version of the composer's music to a Russian movie called "Vstrechiye," meaning "meeting." Actually, however, the title referred to the glorious meeting of all goals in the Soviet five-year plan—and the words were particularly lyrical about the nobility of Communist society for such an achievement.

file Republicans don't agree with the "ghastly philosophy" of their leaders.

Lehman's chief difficulties in New York have been with too eager photographers. One wanted to photograph him with Dulles when both were attending the Mayor's "bipartisan" luncheon for President Truman on the fourth birthday of the United Nations.

"If I am photographed with him, people will think I am shadow-boxing," he told a newsman.

Mayor William O'Dwyer charged Republicans with "trying to frame" Lehman when the New York Sun got a candid shot of Frank Erickson, big-time gambler, some distance in the rear of Lehman at a big Democratic dinner.

Another cameraman photographed Lehman with Newbold Morris, Republican-Liberal fusion candidate for Mayor, at an International Ladies Garment Workers luncheon. Lehman thought he had a previous understanding Morris wouldn't appear.

Semantics Trouble

DULLES tells bus stop and city audiences that Lehman "is no doubt a very fine gentleman, but he isn't worth six billion dollars"—the deficit Dulles says "statism" has piled up in this country.

Pummeling the "welfare state" and its "cost in taxes and human liberty," the newcomer to politics, taking his first cold plunge for elective office in this campaign, always works around to foreign affairs, the subject he knows best.

He tells the voters he gave up "battling with Vishinsky" because he thought it more important to warn the American people against the "Fair Deal" trend toward an "all-powerful state."

The story is that Dulles gave up the term "statism" after an upstate farmer told a Republican leader:

"That fellow Dulles is right about 'statism.' Why do I have to pay a State tax to run my machine over a State road?"

Axman's Blessing

YOU NEVER can tell what will happen, or for that matter what Dulles will say, in the course of a day upstate on the Dulles bus.

On one such day he left for a conference with 50 doctors organized against "socialized medicine," ate lunch with Republican leaders, visited a salt refinery just to see how it worked, dropped in at a farmers' fair to admire some prize sheep, and addressed some bashful workers at a crane and hoist plant.

The same afternoon, he spoke at two country-wide Dulles rallies. At one of these, Representative John Taber, the GOP budget ax wielder President Truman tried and failed to lick last year, came aboard. Taber rode the bus with Dulles into Auburn, Taber's home town.

That night Taber appeared on the platform with Dulles, praised him as "one of the soundest and ablest men in the Senate."

Dulles normally receives rapt attention, and good hands from his bus stop audiences, but at Rochester he ran into some difficulties.

A group of Rochester University students asked too many questions. One couldn't understand why Dulles favored expansion of Social Security but opposed setting up a health program on the same basis.

Another wanted to know why Dulles condemned Lehman for accepting the American Labor Party support in the past, when some Republicans upstate received ALP indorsements.

It was during this round with the students that Dulles called Lehman a "liar" for the second time in this campaign. He said he condemned Lehman not so much for taking American Labor Party support but for having "lied about it."

Reactionaries

President Truman has affixed a new label to those of his fellow citizens who oppose any of his policies. They used to be dismissed as "selfish interests." Now they have become reactionaries—that is, people who seek to undo political progress. It is a politician's trick to resort to this kind of name-calling, very convenient, too, since it enables the speaker to discredit his critics and seek support for his own program without having to defend it on its merits.

That was precisely what the President did in his Minneapolis address. He outlined his objectives in vague general terms: a fair price for farm products, protection of small business against monopolies, decent housing at reasonable prices, assured incomes for the aged and ill, development of natural resources for the benefit of all, etc. Every right-thinking American would welcome the advent of a utopian society like that envisaged by the President. But many Americans doubt whether the specific legislative proposals of the Administration will hasten attainment of the millennium. They point out that our resources are limited; that though today's expenditures may be tomorrow's investments, they are also present burdens that should be adjusted to present-day capacity to assume.

There are honest differences of opinion about the methods and the effects of many of the programs designed for the benefit of particular groups and classes. Granting that farmers ought to receive fair prices and workers are entitled to good wages, there remains the knotty problem of defining standards of fairness and goodness, and the even more difficult task of maintaining those standards without destroying the system of free enterprise.

Critics will not be silenced by pretense on the part of the President that those who presume to differ from him are either reactionaries of the Left who aim to prevent progress by revolution and class warfare, or reactionaries of the Right given to "hysterical cries of bankruptcy and despair." If Mr. Truman's analysis is correct, then this country is in desperate straits, for it follows that millions of Amercans who did not vote to return the President to office are dedicated to the task of obstructing progress toward a richer and fuller life.

Guests From Abroad

In New York, where some 1500 foreigners have come to work as international civil servants in the United Nations Secretariat, an interesting experiment in hospitality is under way. The employes of the Secretariat are the working staff—as distinguished from the diplomats and high officials. They are set apart from the community both by the nature of their jobs and by their strangeness. Life would be a great deal more lonely for them than it is were it not for the helpfulness of an organization called the Volunteer Desk, supported by a grant from the Carnegie Foundation for International Peace.

The heartwarming story of the help rendered U. N. personnel by the Volunteer Desk is told by Roger William Riis in the October issue of The Survey. It has provided a general counseling service in respect of living quarters, travel, medical care, baby sitters and other familiar needs. But its most valuable service, perhaps, has been as a clearing house for American individuals and organizations who desired to extend hospitality to the members of the Secretariat. Not alone from New York and its environs but from all over the country invitations have flooded in for holiday dinners, for parties, for weekend visits. The result has been an exceedingly happy growth in mutual friendship and understanding.

We wonder whether something of the sort isn't urgently needed here as well. The ambassadors and ministers, the counselors and attaches of all the foreign embassies and legations in this Capital are no doubt wined and dined to the limit of their endurance. But the secretaries on the lower rungs of the hierarchical ladder, the clerks and stenographers, the personnel who don't quite qualify as brass—all these are left pretty much to their own devices in a city where they may be altogether friendless and handicapped by difficulties of language. Many of them, no doubt, would welcome acquaintance with Washingtonians and a chance to enter American homes.

Hospitality of this sort need not be formal, nor need it follow any rules of protocol. Extended generously, it would be rewarding to hosts as well as guests. Real benefits would be likely to flow from it in terms of individual friendships and also in terms of enhanced international good will. The reinvigorated United Nations Club, which did a good deal of this sort of work during the war, might be an ideal agency to take on the job of arranging introductions and clearing invitations. The idea seems worth exploring at any rate. And Thanksgiving seems a peculiarly appropriate time to begin.

Churchill On Style

The other day, Mr. Winston Churchill, upon receiving a gold medal and an award of a thousand pounds from the Sunday Times of London for his "outstanding contribution to English literature," took occasion to say a few words in praise and defense of the much-abused English language. "We must," he said, "preserve our language and see that it is not unduly damaged by modern slang and adoption."

Now this is interesting because Mr. Churchill is one of the few expert practitioners of the English idiom who survive in British public life. It is true that Mr. Churchill's method of using the language is in the general tradition of Burke and Macaulay and thus of the sort described, not without disdain, by Matthew Arnold as "the Corinthian style." Some of Mr. Churchill's more fastidious compatriots, notably the critic, Mr. Herbert Read, esteem him far less as a master of English prose than does Viscount Kelmsley of the Sunday Times. This is mainly perhaps a matter of taste; but it would probably be fair enough to say of Mr. Churchill as a writer, what was once said of Burke, that he is more quotable than readable.

But at any rate, Mr. Churchill, like his parliamentary follower, Sir A. P. Herbert, is a determined warrior against governmental jargon, or, as we call it, gobbledygook. The Labor bureaucracy in England takes to gobbledygook just about as naturally as the bureaucracy here in Washington. Many, and in some cases unprintable, are the anecdotes concerning Mr. Churchill's comments on reports submitted by his official subordinates in the days when he was Prime Minister and war leader of Great Britain. Most of these anecdotes, perhaps, are historically false, but like most legends have a truth of their own.

Speaking in public the other day, Mr. Churchill lamented the growing tendency to use terms or phrases like "in short supply" when it would be just as easy to say "scarce," and "breaking down" instead of "sifting"; or, if one must be learned and solemn about it, "analysis." "Broadly speaking," he observed, "the short words are the best and the old words best of all."

Let us waive the question whether it is possible to speak broadly in short words and proceed to the more interesting question whether there is any other personage in British public life who follows Mr. Churchill's precepts in these matters. As far as we can perceive, there is but one, and strangely enough it is Mr. Churchill's archenemy, Mr. Aneurin Bevan.

A Question Of Fairness

Politics has a habit of flinging truth to the winds in the last days of electioneering, and the bitter senatorial contest in New York is no exception, being even worse than usual. The foremost offenders seem to be in the Lehman camp, which, in the excitement of the home stretch, is seeking to impugn Senator Dulles' record in foreign affairs. The indictment is studded with half-truths. One example of this kind of misrepresentation is the use that has been made of part of an editorial in The Washington Post. Therein we criticized Mr. Dulles for saying that if he did not go back to the Senate, "the chances are there will be an end to this bipartisan foreign policy." In the part of the editorial that was not quoted, testimony was given to the valuable service that Mr. Dulles had rendered. This requires now to be reiterated. The part that is missing in the handbills and advertisements of the aforementioned editorial is this: "Before he entered the Senate Mr. Dulles was a principal architect of the bipartisan approach to foreign affairs, and during his brief service as a Senator he contributed greatly, in collaboration with Senator Vandenberg, to bring about the acceptance of the Atlantic Pact and the wise revision and adoption of the Mutual Defense Program." We might have added that he was a tower of strength in the formulation of the Charter of the United Nations.

Virgin Islands

In choosing a successor to Judge William H. Hastie as Governor of the Virgin Islands, President Truman would do well, we think, to follow the sound precedent he established in respect of Puerto Rico. In 1947, he named a native Puerto Rican, Jesus T. Pinero, as Governor, prefacing a successful request to Congress to enable the Puerto Ricans to fill the governorship in future by popular elections. The people of the Virgin Islands deserve the same progress toward full self-government.

The first step is selection of a bona fide resident of the islands in Judge Hastie's place. There are islanders thoroughly qualified to fill the office. An alien Governor, no matter how well intentioned, is likely to be more responsive to the wishes of the Interior Department, which has jurisdiction over the Virgin Islands, than to the people he has been designated to govern. The effect is discouraging to democracy. The Governor of any community should be a man familiar with its problems, sympathetic to its interests—and, ideally, of course, accountable to its electorate.

Sluggish Redevelopment

The prospective rescue of the District Redevelopment Land Agency from its dormant state may raise more hopes than can be fulfilled. Congress set up this agency several years ago to clear the Capital's enormous blighted regions. But Congress has consistently denied it funds with which to operate. Now the Federal Housing and Home Finance Agency finds that it can provide administrative expenses to the land agency, and presumably intends to do so. Lest overanxious citizens jump to the conclusion that the big push against the slums is about to begin, however, it is well to remember other stubborn facts.

With the funds it will obtain from the HHFA the land agency hopes to hire a technical director who can begin pulling loose ends together. But even if the land agency had a billion dollars it could do nothing concrete right away. It will be able to purchase slum areas, clear them and plan their redevelopment only after plans have been made by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission. The NCPPC has completed such a plan for only one area—Marshall Heights—and this project has been frozen by act of Congress.

The Park and Planning Commission is soon to publish its comprehensive plan for Washington and this will indicate in a general way the use to which each section of the District is to be put. But a detailed city-wide plan dealing specifically with housing will be needed as a guide to the actual work of redevelopment. Then of course area and project plans will have to be worked out before any dirt can begin to fly. At present the NCPPC has no funds for any of this planning, but it is hoped that such funds may be forthcoming from the Federal Housing and Home Finance Agency.

Fortunately, the work of rescuing slum dwellers will not be completely stalled while these essential details are being worked out. The last Congress removed the handcuffs from the National Capital Housing Authority, and it has a substantial allocation of funds under the Housing Act passed this year. NCHA's first task will be the construction of low-rent dwellings that will relieve the pressure upon the overcrowded slums and thus make demolition and redevolpment possible. This will necessitate the location of new sites, which ought to be undertaken in conformity to a city-wide housing plan. One doesn't need to be an expert to see that the planning phase has now become especially vital and that it may become a bottleneck unless prompt steps are taken.

Helen Hokinson

Of all the names in the list of victims of the frightful disaster at the National Airport last Tuesday, the one best known to American public was that of Miss Helen Hokinson. Unless we are mistaken, she will be the most generally mourned, and by multitudes who knew no more about her than her signature on the famous cartoons in the New Yorker magazine. Even those who have a professional interest in celebrities knew little more of her than that. So great was her dread or dislike of personal publicity that almost the only biographical material available was the line in Who's Who in America, giving her vocation and her address.

Yet, with all her shyness, Miss Hokinson was the manifestation as well as the historian of what is probably the most influential group in American life, those middle-aged and well-to-do clubwomen, and Vassar or Wellesley or Smith alumnae, who make such an earnest effort to keep up with the obligations imposed by their privileged status. Miss Hokinson, in making quiet and unmalicious sport of their foibles and naivetes, provided us with unvarying amusement, tinctured, however, with a good deal of admiration.

For she was as much their champion as their satirist. Whatever their faults, she considered her characters to represent the best element in the national life; and the British anthropologist, Mr. Geoffrey Gorer, not an entirely friendly observer of our civilization, agreed with her fully. In his study of the American People, Mr. Gorer observed that

> It is easy enough to laugh at these middle-aged women with their eager seeking after knowledge and wisdom, their dogged clinging to stylishness and a falsely youthful appearance, their naive approach to the arts and to "gracious living" (a key phrase), their facade of almost excessive self-assurance, so often a protective front for the deepest uncertainty and humility, the high seriousness with which they view themselves as Paladins of Civic Virtue and arbiters of the world's destiny . . . It hurts our dignity to think that our future is being determined by Helen Hokinson's grotesques, by the women with monotonous, insistent voices, who are dissatisfied with their bathrooms, or prosaically enthusiastic about a piece of real old-world architecture, by Madam Chairman. But one might easily be in worse hands.

The circumstances of Miss Hokinson's death bear out Mr. Gorer's judgment; she was flying here to attend a meeting of the Community Chest.

HARVEST

My heart was once like any orchard-bough
That bears the leaf, the blossom, and the fruit;
And still, I think, it would be bearing now
Had sorrow gnawed less keenly at the root.

I think, about this season, it would be Down-bent with some sweet harvest, ripe and red.
But look upon that piteous bough and see
The stunted fruit, the fatted worm, instead.

Export Sales Tax

In effect, the British devaluation of the pound has operated as if it were a tax on our exports to Britain. The devaluations by other countries had the same effect with regard to exports to their countries. Nevertheless, when at the time I suggested the possibility of a tax on export sales of the United States with proceeds earmarked for purchase of strategic materials and Point IV, the same persons who favored the devaluation regarded such an export sales tax as a "barrier." There seems to be less "barrier" with such a method of giving others a chance to earn dollars than in our failure to import.

An editorial in your issue of October 29 and quite a few which have previously appeared have consistently stressed the view that there is no ultimate solution without imports by the United States.

In a column a few days ago the Alsops point out that the next year's discrepancy between tax income and Federal expenditures may be as high as seven billions, and that foreign aid is the most likely part of the expenditures to be cut off. At the same time President Truman has indicated that he will seek additional tax revenues next session. From what source?

As the weeks have passed, more and more events and statements have occurred which seem to indicate that an export sales tax with proceeds used for strategic materials and Point IV may not be as bad as what may happen if we don't have one.

Quite a few countries have export sales taxes, although that indicates some political feasibility rather than desirability. Unless I am mistaken, I seem to recall that Sweden began using an export sales tax about a year ago with proceeds to subsidize imports.

The more consideration I have given the matter the better it has seemed to look. In testing out the idea on professionals in international economic programs I find them docrinaire in approach to this rather than analytical of effects. It has even seemed that an export sales tax might be a better source of added revenue for the general fund than some of the kinds of taxes we are likely to get.

Dead End Tactics

The time has come for the little man in big places to stop acting like Dead End Kids.

How else describe the bullying behavior of a Secretary of Defense with knocking heads together as his sure cure for the malaise from which unification is so grievously and so patently suffering?

If, in fact, Admiral Denfeld was not the right man to represent the Navy in the upbuilding of an effective, unified defense, then he should have been replaced with a man who is. Surely, no one will question the stark necessity of such a move. Indubitably, in similar circumstances, heads would be lopped off in Russia. But in Russia it would be done within the four walls of the Kremlin, without the possibility of a leak to tell the outside world of disharmony.

We are no longer in the era of shirtsleeve diplomacy. Swagger and bluster and bullying—in international relations—are as declasse as spittoons. Applied domestically—before crammed galleries of hostile observers from all parts of the world—these tactics work infinitely greater harm to our national security than could any interservice disagreement.

In a word, if we must wash our slightly soiled linen in public, let us omit the wood-ash-and-lye methods of a century agone, stop hurling charges of "Fancy Dans" against our adversaries, taking time out to learn the fundamentals of that glossy word, diplomacy.

Freedom And Welfare

This nonsense about welfare legislation leading us to slavery has gone far enough. For political freedom is actually more secure in "welfare states" than in more conservative countries.

It is significant that our anti-welfare Cassandras don't mention the Scandinavian countries. These countries have been welfare states from way back and have the highest standards of both freedom and security in Europe. They lie next to and are afraid of Russia, but are not bothered by any serious internal Communist problem, and are not hysterical like American conservatives beyond the Atlantic.

The Socialist Britain, for all its troubles, does not have the Communist problems of more conservative France and Italy.

Finally, may I note that Russia cannot be considered a welfare state for the obvious reason that its dictatorial rulers are more interested in world power than in bettering the lot of the people.

Announcing Streets

While traveling through rain and fog the other night on a crowded Georgia-Alaska bus, a number of passengers, including myself, experienced considerable difficulty in trying to locate our respective stops. Being more fortunate than some of the others, I missed mine by only four or five blocks.

It is difficult enough for seated passengers to recognize street signs at night under such weather conditions and practically impossible for the "straphangers." Even if the driver had called out the major street names, he probably would not have been heard beyond the first three seats.

We read a great deal in the news about how much the transit company has the comfort and happiness of the passengers at heart in wanting to provide radio entertainment. Would it not be a little more to the point to install loudspeakers for announcing the names of major streets?

Defenseless Marines

It would appear to a nonmilitary person, such as myself, that the Army and the Air Force enthusiasts are trying to chop the 173-year tradition of the Marine Corps into nothingness. As was brought out in the testimony of the generals, the Marines have little chance of defending themselves in top defense discussions, because they never have been and are not now represented directly in the major policy group.

The Marines have always been invaluable on specialized missions.

They are trained to be the spearhead or the shock troops.

They are trained to "take a beachhead"—in other words, they are always in readiness for action.

Any further attempt to reduce our corps to an inconsequential force will be resented by the American public, including the mothers of Marines, among whom I'm very proud to be numbered.

"Fancy Dans"

The widespread misplaced emphasis on General Bradley's speech has given the public an erroneous idea of what he really said. The press and radio commentators did a poor job of reporting. They lacked thoroughness. They sought to sensationalize and make headlines. So they highlighted certain portions of his speech and took them out of context.

As a result, we hear that General Bradley called the admirals "fancy dans." Actually, he said, "This is no time for 'fancy dans' . . ." The admirals were not mentioned. The most important portion of General Bradley's speech was omitted from all dispatches I heard: "Each player on this team . . . must be an all-American." To illustrate, I quote the paragraph concerned:

"Probably complete understanding, cooperation and trust could have avoided that fatal day (December 7, 1941). But it, and the subsequent lessons we learned, day by day, until September, 1945, should have taught all military men that our military forces are one team—in the game to win regardless of who carries the ball. This is no time for 'fancy dans' who won't hit the line with all they have on every play, unless they can call the signals. Each player on this team—whether he shines in the spotlight of the backfield or eats dirt in the line—must be an all-American."

Interdependence

With the aim of preventing war, it is vital and important to call together the nations through representatives, private or public, to consider a declaration of interdependence. Such a convention or meeting might have the following purposes in mind:

1. To give the world a fresh start—economically, politically, socially.
2. Since "this nation (world) cannot permanently endure half slave and half free," nor can "a house divided against itself . . . stand," we would resolve East-West relationships without loss in principle.
3. To focus attention on United Nations reforms—five years after its birth.
4. To put forward solutions for the problems of world political and economic union—limited though these solutions may be.
5. To propose a world prosperity campaign—a natural outgrowth of the European Recovery Program and "Point Four." A full stomach is basic insurance against social chaos.
6. To reaffirm beyond doubt the central position of the individual in world society.

A draft of a declaration of interdependence has already been written. Those men and women, highly competent, both in and out of public office, who have seen this declaration think well of it.

Mrs. Roosevelt has stated that it does not interfere with the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

Although this meeting would not convene until June, 1950, discussion currently of such a convention, its proposed agenda, and possible results might forestall an open armed clash. It might give us time to build a saner world.

Dr. Robert Oppenheimer said in the fall of 1945, "I think if one solves the problem presented by the atomic bomb, one will have a pilot plant for the solution of the problem of ending war." The finding of that solution would be the hope of this convention.

Too Little But Not Too Late

By Andre Visson

Paris Compromise

AFTER five days and nights of discussion in the magnificent conference rooms of the Chateau de la Muette—former residence of Baron Henri de Rothschild, at the entrance of Paris' Bois de Boulogne—the European Marshall Plan Council brought out a resolution which will hardly evoke enthusiasm. The cautiously worded document presents itself as a kind of compromise between the American conception of "a single large market of Europe" and western Europe's present political and economic realities.

Now, there are two kinds of compromises: those in which each interested party believes it got slightly more than the others, and those in which each one believes that it had to give more than the others. The Paris compromise belongs to the second group.

It can hardly satisfy Paul G. Hoffman, who made a pathetic plea for the "integration" of Europe's economies, brandishing the sinister shadow of a new "dark age" threatening Europe and the rest of the world—if Europeans fail to act or act wrongly. It is not likely to impress Congress when Mr. Hoffman comes before it with a request for the third annual Marshall Plan appropriation.

It certainly does not satisfy those continental European leaders who, in the Organization for European Economic Cooperation in Paris and in the Council of Europe in Strasbourg, have been fighting for greater political and economic unity of Europe. And it is doubtful whether this compromise satisfies even the British, who made it inevitable by pointing out that "their responsibilities as the leading member of the sterling area" made impossible the "integration" of the British economy into that of Europe. Indeed, the compromise worked out in Paris is based on the proposal made by Sir Stafford Cripps to end quotas on imports for 50 percent of private trade among the Marshall Plan countries by December 15.

THE SAD truth about the European Marshall Plan Council, as well as the Council for Europe in Strasbourg, is that the British have all the time been working in these European organizations with tongue in cheek. As Sir Stafford Cripps has now publicly admitted in Paris, they never believed in the desirability of integrating the British economy with that of Europe. And in private conversation many leading British Laborites have expressed their conviction that integration of European economies is impossible and cannot be achieved.

But, naturally, the British do not want to appear responsible for this impossibility. They do not worry too much about the anti-British feeling which has lately found expression in many continental countries. They know that whether or not western European nations like them or approve of their economic policies, the continental democracies cannot turn their backs on Britain.

The situation with regard to the United States, however, is somewhat different. The British seem to be confident that whatever the United States Congress may think about Britain's economic policies, it cannot let Britain down. Political and military necessities, they believe, will compel the United States to continue, in one form or another, American aid to Britain.

NONETHELESS, in spite of their general confidence in the "wisdom" of the American Administration, many Britons are concerned about the "emotionalism" of American public opinion. They have therefore accepted the original conception of the Marshall Plan as the "road toward a greater European unity" in the same spirit as they accepted the Atlantic Charter during the war: "These are fine declarations of principles and of noble intentions. Of course, we don't believe that they can be translated into realities. But since American public opinion will feel better for having these declarations on record, we are willing to subscribe to them."

The Atlantic Charter has proved to be untranslatable into political realities. This was not Britain's fault, but that of Soviet Russia. But should western Europe's Economic Union prove impossible of being translated into economic realities, this would be chiefly Britain's fault.

There was only one way for Britain to cast off this responsibility: it was to let the continental Europeans try to achieve economic unity without Britain. The British are convinced it would fail and that in that event the fault could not be laid at Britain's door. Meanwhile, the Paris compromise on the reduction of 50 percent on import quotas should be accepted as a token of "good intentions," together with the recognition of the need for "a single large market in Europe" and of the necessity to "widen the area of transferability of currencies."

Paul G. Hoffman expressed his feeling about the Paris compromise when he declared that there was "no magic in words or resolutions but only in action."

The European Marshall Plan Council has so far produced very little. But it is still not too late to act further if western Europe wants the American Congress to approve the third annual Marshall Plan appropriation next spring.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

Air Force 'Freeze' Was a Renege

By Drew Pearson

PRESIDENT TRUMAN went back on his word to Senators when he froze the 615 million dollars voted by Congress to expand the Air Force to 58 groups.

In the privacy of the White House, he had promised members of the Senate Appropriations Committee not to tie up the Air Force funds if Congress voted the full 58 groups. The conversation took place before Congress had voted any money at all and when Senate and House conferees were deadlocked over the size of the Air Force.

Chairman Kenneth McKellar of Tennessee, speaking for his fellow members of the Appropriations Committee, opened the question by stating: "Well, Mr. President, we seem to be at an impasse . . ."

"Yes, Senator, I know all about it," Truman cut him off. "My position is this: I am for a 48-group Air Force, and I haven't changed my mind."

At this point, Senator Elmer Thomas of Oklahoma asked: "If the money were appropriated for more than 48 groups, would you impound it?"

"No," pledged the President firmly.

After the Senate had adjourned, however, Truman impounded the money anyhow.

Insurance Companies 'Grateful'

IT WAS a cooperative group of life insurance executives who went up to Capitol Hill the other day to announce they were ready to pay up corporation income taxes for the last three years which they have escaped via a loophole in the tax laws.

A week before, in fighting mood, they had protested to a House Ways and Means subcommittee against paying any retroactive taxes.

Last week, however, A. J. McAndless, president of the Lincoln National Life Insurance Co. and chief spokesman for the group, reported the insurance firms were ready to pay between 90 and 92 million dollars for the three years under a so-called "average valuation" payment plan.

The plan calls for an across-the-board lowering of tax deductions on investment income which has redered the insurance firms 100 percent exempt from Federal income assessment. In effect, it will make between 5½ and 6½ percent of investment income in 1947-48-49 subject to taxation.

"We are grateful to you and this subcommittee for giving us concrete proposals to offer our people," McAndless told Congressman Lynch. "And the fact that you set a time limit on our acceptance or rejection also was a big help in bringing some of our balky brethren into line. You have accomplished in less than a week something the Treasury Department spent over two years trying to settle."

Business Opposes Cartels

WHEN the top big business organization of the Nation, the National Association of Manufacturers, denounces cartels and international monopolies, its news. Yet that is exactly what the NAM does in a confidential report on Marshall Plan operations in Europe.

Prepared by Patrick McMahon, an expert who recently returned from a three-month tour of western Europe, the report cites the following as among the "adverse factors" impeding European recovery:

1. The dangerous trend back toward cartelization both by European private business concerns and by the governments themselves;

2. Failure of European private businessmen to seize the initiative and play their responsible roles in the European economy—particularly, their failure to engage in aggressive competition at a time when competition is vitally needed

3. The disproportionately high prices of European manufactured products, which are causing buyer resistance.

The NAM report charges that the trade controls we have clamped on countries receiving Marshall Plan (ECA) aid in many instances have excluded American manufacturers from "historic" European markets and encouraged monopolies in these markets for costly European products.

The "population problem" also needs adjustment, says the McMahon report, pointing out: "When and if all the other economic problems are solved, the bald fact will still remain that western Europe just does not have the productive resources to afford improved living standards to populations of the present size."

Note—"Had there been no Marshall Plan," states the NAM report, "it is probable that the Communists would have taken control of both Italy and Greece by this time; France would have been torn by fratricidal strife between the extreme left and the extreme right; and currency disorders and economic chaos would be prevalent throughout all of western Europe. During the past 12 months, more than 35 percent of the union members in both France and Italy have left the Communist unions for the ranks of the Christian Socialist and other independent labor bodies."

Our Political Economy

Atom Race Is Our Weakest Lead

By Ysabel and Robert Rennie

AMERICAN complacency, already shaken by the speed with which Russia acquired the atomic bomb, has been given a further jolt by the prediction of atomic scientists that Russian bomb production may shortly outstrip ours.

Whether this grim prediction becomes grimmer really depends on several factors. One is the level of technical direction in the Soviet Union. Another is the existence of fissionable materials, a limiting factor here as well as there. A third big question is the level of industrial development in Russia, for there is a stage at which bomb manufacture becomes an industrial process. And finally there is the question: How much production, both in Russia and the United States, could feasibly be diverted to an atomic energy program?

Let us dispose first of the technical question. It has long been fashionable to view Russian scientists as primitives who have somehow come into possession of slide rules and microscopes. The speed with which Russia developed the bomb ought to dispel this idle dream for once and all.

Raw materials are a more serious matter. From the strenuous efforts the Russians have made to work the played-out Czech uranium deposits, there is reason to suspect that fissionable materials are a limiting factor. On the other hand, explorations continue, and new strikes could quickly change the picture.

We would be wise to take for granted the scientific competence of the Russians, and not to bank on a permanent shortage of uranium. That leads us to the far more complex questions of industrial development in the Soviet Union, and of how it might be diverted to a race for bomb production.

Sacrificed to War

WE often read newspaper accounts of wretched living standards in the Soviet Union. But there is a corollary we had better keep in mind: Russian production has for two decades been diverted to fighting a war and building a heavy industry. Living standards are low because they were deliberately sacrificed to the creation of a powerful industrial state.

During the First Five Year Plan (1928-32) the USSR claimed an annual rate of industrial growth of over 20 percent. For the Second Five-Year Plan the rate was 17 percent a year, and for the third, 13 percent. These compare with average rates in the United States of about 4 percent.

There is an upward bias to these figures, and there are limiting factors which will slow the future rate of increase. But even so, we have no reason for complacency. At no time since we have kept accurate statistics has our rate of industrial development approached these figures. This is true even if you make allowance for considerable exaggeration in reported achievements.

At the present time, steel, coal and pig iron production in the Soviet Union is about a quarter of ours. If present goals are attained, they will increase about three and a half times by 1965.

The fact is, however, that as of today, and for the foreseeable future, Russian industry is far behind ours. This being the case, how can anyone predict, as some atomic scientists have done, that within five to ten years Russian bomb production could outstrip our own?

Russia Has Margin

WE are inclined to view our edge in industrial production and assume that it guarantes atomic supremacy. What we forget is that total figures do not count. We are today devoting about one half of 1 per cent of our national income to the atomic energy program. Russia could earmark 25 percent of her national income without seriously affecting her present standard of living.

This is because she devotes about 40 percent of her national income to military expenditures and net investment. This percentage is about twice our own. If we were to divert a comparable absolute amount, it would seriously disrupt our economy; and to divert a comparable share of our production, we should ourselves have to become a totalitarian economy.

In other words, when it comes to excelling us in any one type of production, whether atomic energy or any other, the Russians have all the advantage. On the other hand, when it comes to total industrial production, we are incomparably ahead of the Soviet Union.

Alarmed at the prospects of Russian atomic development, many Americans, including even some atomic scientists, are advocating an all-out race for supremacy. We wonder, however, whether they have considered what this would mean.

Half-measures would be useless. We should have to accept a directed economy: wage controls, price controls, production allocations and vastly increased taxation. There would be no relaxation short of war. On the other hand, since the USSR has had such an economy for 20 years, what would for us be an economic revolution would for her be a very simple matter of reallocating men and materials.

Our Trump Card

IT SEEMS foolish to play our hand from weakness when we can play it from strength.

Our real supremacy lies in the fields where Russia is weakest: in our complex, beautifully balanced, immensely productive industrial machine; and in our standard of living, which is our trump card against the slave economy of the Communist state.

We have everything to gain by an atomic settlement in the United Nations. There are those who believe that the Russians are itching for an atomic arms race. What seems far more likely is that they would really like an atomic settlement.

A bomb race would, for the Russians, entail an indefinite postponement of the industrial goals toward which they have sacrificed so much. For us it would mean the sacrifice of that industrial balance which is our true strength, as well as the momentum which keeps us in the vanguard of world production.

We should think long and hard before we throw away our institutions and our whole freedom for a mess of doubtful military security. If we can only defeat slavery by becoming slaves, we might as well write off democracy as a noble experiment and retire to the caves.

Fulton Oursler's Modern Parables

The Golden Moment

DEAR Friends and Gentle Hearts:

What are the prizes of life? Wealth? Fame? Power? No man has ever found true happiness in any of these things. The real rewards of our labors lie in the victories of the heart.

I think this great truth first came home to me at midnight supper in the grill of the old Vaudeville Club, on 46th st., just off Broadway. My companion, over scrambled eggs and milk, was that mystery master of our time, the famous Houdini. At the witching-hour, I happened to ask him a question:

"Houdini, you have known more great thrills than any other man I know. You have been handcuffed and ankle-cuffed and bound in chains, locked in a box and the box corded with ropes and tossed overboard into the sea. Yet in five minutes you rise swimming on the surface, free, with all your chains and cuffs left in the still closed box, while thousands on the shore stand in wonder and applaud.

"Once, you startled the Czar of all the Russians by escaping from a supposedly impregnable Siberian transport van. Apparently helpless in a straitjacket, you have swung upside-down, a rope around your heels, hanging from a skyscraper, and there and then, high in the air, have made your escape. I am curious to know what is the greatest thrill in all your experience."

Houdini smiled with the expression of one who, through hardship and tenderness, had learned the true values of life.

"It was nothing like any of those things you mentioned," he assured me. "Actually, the experience spanned 20 years.

"When I was very young and very poor, I was performing my magic in an empty store, in downtown New York. One afternoon, as I stood outside with the ballyhoo man, trying to coax the customers, a small boy grabbed me by the sleeve.

" 'Mr. Weiss,' he said, 'I've got a message for you.'

" 'Call me Houdini,' I answered angrily. 'What do you want?'

" 'Your father is dying,' said the boy. 'Come home at once.'

"It took all the money in my pockets to pay for the cab that brought me uptown. When I entered the bedroom of our East Side flat, my mother and all my brothers were standing at the bedside, but my father's eyes were turned to the door as I hurried in. When he saw me, he lifted his hand feebly, and reached out toward my mother.

" 'Dear wife,' he said, 'never worry. Harry will pour gold in your apron.'

"Those were his last words.

"In the years that followed, I performed in theaters all over the world. I was playing in London when I received a cable from the old Palace Theater, in New York. To appear at the Palace meant that a vaudevillian had reached the top. The cable offered me a week's engagement, at a thousand dollars. In those days, that was a fortune to me. I sent my answer: 'Yes, if you will pay my salary in gold.'

"And on the pay day of my first week at the Palace, I received a handful of golden coins. I carried them, tightly in my palm, up to my mother's flat, where I found her in her rocking chair. And I swallowed hard as I said to her: 'Hold out your apron, Mother,' and let the golden shower fall. That was the greatest thrill I ever knew."

In the lives of every one of us, there is the opportunity to make good the faith that others have in us. And to give of our own blessings to others. In such moments, we find the only worth-while thrills in life. Faithfully yours,

FULTON OURSLER.

Looking at the South

Burying the Sequels

By Hodding Carter

GREENVILLE, Miss. — Now that the shouting has died down, let's take another look at a couple of laughingstock stories from the South: the banning of the movie "Pinky" in Atlanta and the proposal to give little Jefferson Military College fifty million dollars in exchange for its academic soul.

Both of these stories have had happy endings, more or less, and almost everyone is fairly well satisfied. The ban on "Pinky" has been lifted, after certain agreed-upon deletions, and the trustees of faltering Jefferson have refused to take the biggest educational bribe in history. But it's just too bad for the South that the original errors were made, because anticlimatical happy endings rarely make the front pages of the Nation.

As a matter of record, in four of the biggest papers in the country the sequels to the original boners were buried way back. The initial stories were played up on page one and the editorial page.

So it is that a great many people probably don't even know that "Pinky" is being shown in Atlanta and that there won't be a storm trooper seminary down Natchez way. The original unwisdom of a Georgia censor and a group of school trustees in Mississippi can be blamed for the deserved criticism; but certainly their errors have been compounded by a journalistic disregard for the less sensational but far more meaningful second thoughts in each case.

Moreover, the stories were so pat that their deeper implications were generally overlooked. They were universally interpreted as being examples of Southern racial bias, which is true enough. The angry condemnation of the Nation was almost altogether based upon revulsion against such bias.

That reaction was both proper and inevitable. But what was lost sight of in the Atlanta story was the basic evil of autocratic censorship itself. The Mississippi story was so brutal in its racial and religious overtones that it obscured the underlying implications of ruthless wealth and the over-all assumptions of super-inferior relationships.

Stupid censorship is not restricted to the South, and it is practiced elsewhere because of prejudices other than racial. The narrowness of a Boston or Philadelphia police censor certainly matches that of the little despots here and there in the South. The white supremacy theme is different only in degree from assumptions of the superiority or infallibility of one religion or one denomination. It is the harsh and autocratic spirit that should be equally feared in all its manifestations.

This is no defense of the South's frequently odious expressions of racial concepts. But it is important to remember that when we neatly bracket the censorship of an earnest movie as an old Southern pastime, or portray the group superiority complex as simply a Southern aberration, we are dangerously minimizing universal threats to the democratic goal.

Red Advisers Reach China By Hundreds

HONGKONG (ONA). — The long-expected arrival of Russian political and military advisers in China has begun.

Approximately 600 Soviet advisers and family members have appeared at Tientsin, North China's principal seaport. They are entrusted with propaganda and industrial reorganization there, foreigners arriving from the north report.

Ten times that number are due to reach Shanghai shortly, of whom about 3000 are expected to be technicians, the remainder comprising their families.

Between 70 and 80 Soviet advisers have arrived in Hankow, where they have bought up all the available stocks of Scotch whisky and vodka, according to foreigners reaching Hongkong from the great middle Yangtze trading city. Hankow is under the command of Gen. Lin Piao, notorious for pro-Russian sympathies.

Some of the new arrivals are said to be military. In true Russian fashion they are keeping their whereabouts secret, but it is thought that they are occupying the headquarters of the former American military advisory group. Shopkeepers are not allowed to deliver goods to them direct but are told to send them to a hotel where they are collected by Russians in jeeps.

Matter of Fact

Truman Heeds Opposite Schools

By Joseph and Stewart Alsop

ANYONE who wants to know where the Truman Administration is headed should pay very particular attention to the name of the man President Truman appoints to succeed Dr. Edwin Nourse as chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers. For his name will suggest the probable answer to a whole series of deeply important unanswered questions.

Some of these questions are: Will the Administration really slice defense expenditures sharply in the year of the Beria bomb? Will the Administration, as a recent public statement by the President seemed to suggest, really plug for higher taxes? And, finally, how hard will Truman really fight for his Fair Deal Program?

If the name of Nourse's successor is Leon Keyserling, present vice chairman of the council, the probable answer to the first two questions is "no." And the probable answer to the third question is "very hard indeed." For Keyserling is the candidate of the labor-liberal element in the Administration. And he is also one of the leading figures in a continuing and deeply significant contest within the Administration, which President Truman has never resolved.

This struggle revolves around two conflicting economic and fiscal theories. On the one hand are the economizers, who are deeply disturbed by the spectacle of mounting deficits in boom years, and whose dream is therefore a balanced budget.

The recently deposed Dr. Nourse was one of the most important leaders of this group. Among his allies have been Secretary of the Treasury John Snyder, Secretary of Commerce Charles Sawyer, Presidential Aide John Steelman, Budget Director Frank Pace on some issues, and now apparently Defense Secretary Louis Johnson.

Fantastic Contradiction

THE economizers concentrate on two obvious methods of balancing the budget—cutting expenditures and raising taxes. The trouble is that hardly anyone believes that now is the time to raise taxes, or that new taxes would really make up the prospective 5½-billion-dollar deficit. As for cutting expenses, the largest and most immediately painless area for slicing costs is defense and foreign spending.

President Truman has clearly been listening to the economizers. This is suggested by his rather equivocal statement on higher taxes, which actually probably meant very little. It is also suggested by something that means a great deal—the fantastic contradiction between Truman's announcement that the Soviets had perfected an atomic bomb and his virtually simultaneous decision to cut defense expenditures drastically.

Yet, as is so often the case, Truman has also been listening to the second group, which includes such men as Keyserling's colleagues, Economic Counselor John Clark, Agriculture Secretary Charles Brennan and the Agriculture Department economist, Dr. Louis Bean, and, on most issues, Presidential Counsel Clark Clifford.

These men fix their eyes on a higher level of national income, rather than on expenditures, taxes, and the current deficit. They argue that only a constantly increasing national income will permit a balanced budget, or indeed make it possible for the United States to carry its tremendous burden of economic responsibilities.

The National Income

THAT this group also has Truman's ear is indicated not only by the President's dryly worded acceptance of Dr. Nourse's resignation. More important evidence is Truman's call for a 300-billion-dollar national income in five years, which is clearly destined to become a major Fair Deal war cry. The 300 billion figure was first put forward by Keyserling.

This group argues that the only way out of deficit spending is to get the level of production, business activity, and employment the country had in 1948, and then increase this level yearly. If this can be done, they assert, even at the present level of taxes and expenditures, the budget would be about balanced in 1951, and there would be a surplus in 1952.

The alternative, according to this theory, is growing unemployment and greater and greater deficits as the Government gives relief to the unemployed. If this is to be avoided, national income must increase at a constant rate of about 3 percent a year. Only this rate of increase can balance off constantly growing productivity of labor.

No Clear Idea

THE trouble is that no one seems to have a very clear idea of how this dream of an endlessly increasing national income is to be achieved. Equally, the economizers have no very clear idea of how their dream of a balanced budget is to be realized without cutting the liver and lights out of the defense program.

Meanwhile, the President continues to borrow a bit of his economic program from one side and another bit from the other. And this system of pick and choose, without any real national economic policy, is sure to lead to bad trouble sooner or later, either here or abroad.

The Gallup Poll

'Ike' Is GOP Favorite for 1952

By George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

THE name of Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower stands out in the minds of both Republican voters and independents as their top choice at present to head the Republican presidential ticket in 1952.

Harold E. Stassen, who, like General Eisenhower, is now a university president, is the second most popular choice among Republicans and independents questioned by the institute.

Interviewers presented a list of 10 names to a cross-section of voters who classify themselves as either Republicans or as independents, and asked each voter:

"Here is a list of men who have been mentioned as possible candidates for the Republican Party. Which one would you like to see nominated as the Republican candidate for President?"

The following tables show the vote among persons who classify themselves as Republicans and among those who consider themselves independents in politics:

REPUBLICAN VOTERS
Dwight D. Eisenhower	25%
Harold E. Stassen	19
Senator Robert A Taft	15
Gov. Thomas E. Dewey	12
Gov. Earl Warren	10
Sen. Arthur H. Vandenberg	6
Senator Leverett Saltonstall	3
Senator John W. Bricker	3
Others in list	1
None of these	2
Don't know	4
	100%

INDEPENDENT VOTERS
Dwight D. Eisenhower	32%
Harold E. Stassen	14
Sen. Arthur H. Vandenberg	11
Gov. Earl Warren	10
Senator Robert A. Taft	9
Gov. Thomas E. Dewey	8
Senator Leverett Saltonstall	3
Senator John W. Bricker	2
Others in list	2
None of these	3
Don't know	7

(This table adds to more than 100 percent because a few independent voters gave more than one selection.)

Any survey at this early date obviously has little significance apart from showing whether Republican rank-and-file thinking inclines in the direction of conservative leaders or of progressives and middle-of-the-roaders. But political observers will see a number of points of special interest in the results of today's survey.

Eisenhower has proportionally greater strength among independent voters than among "regular" Republicans. Vandenberg, one of the architects of the bipartisan foreign policy, also appears to be more popular with the independents than with the regulars.

On the other hand, Taft, Stassen and Dewey get a substantially higher vote among Republican regulars than they do among independent voters.

The Magazine Rack

PROSPECTIVE JARENTS in the future will probably be able "to exercise a substantial degree of choice as to the sex of their children," says Bruce Bliven in the Ladies Home Journal. Scientific techniques developed are not infallible, obviously, but they are accurate enough to change the present ratio of 105 boy babies to every 100 girl babies born, the author thinks.

Experiments made at Duke University have proved, according to Bliven, that there is "a definite and marked correlation between the sex of a child and the time within the fertilization period in which the insemination took place." Girls are conceived early, boys late in the period.

Will the human race wreck itself once this principle becomes widely known? No, says Bliven. Because while most parents want a boy first, they quite as often want a girl second, and the "alternation will go on very much as before."

As part of its teen-age series, the Journal does a report on the capacity of the teen-ager for "crowd cruelty," the various fine methods of torture hit upon by the smart sets in schools to make things uncomfortable for the nonconformist or the socially nonacceptable.

A NEWSWEEK exclusive is the tart memo sent to his Foreign Office associates by Secretary Ernest Bevin on Anglo-Italian relations. The Italian government last week informed the British government via the Ambassador there that it was disturbed by the British attitude toward Italian aspirations. Coming as a climax to a whispering and press campaign, this was too much for Bevin, who chose to let fly in the memo picked up by Newsweek.

MILTON MAYER starts the first two pieces on the American Medical Association in Harper's with "The Rise and Fall of Dr. Fishbein." Dr. Fishbein was fired by the association he himself had built up to its present power and wealth, according to Mayer, for this reason: The AMA had a real case against compulsory health insurance, "but its case could not get a hearing as long as Fishbein was making it." Besides, adds Mayer, "physicians . . . resented their identification with his low comedy routine."

A good one in itself, Mayer's story is no less readable for its facile phrases such as, "He seems to have thought himself up"; and "medicine needed a spokesman; it got a spieler."

Other Harper's reading is George N. Shuster's "The Catholic Controversy." Shuster, the Catholic head of Hunter College, is nonpartisan in what he calls the controversy slowly shaping up and which could, he thinks "scorch the roots of American democracy." He simply states the problem and warns, "It will not help to play ostrich one minute and firebrand the next."

Peter F. Drucker winds up three articles on the New Society with "The Insecurity of Labor Unions." Labor unions should have the security of some sort of closed or union shop, says Drucker. But, he adds, if they are given this enormous power over the lives of men, they should be limited and regulated. Drucker indicates along what lines he thinks necessary.

VOGUE CARRIES words of advice to party-giving mothers on how to make daughter's debut a success. Canasta addicts, too, can turn to Jesse C. Beeseley's "Why You're Losing at Canasta" and mend their ways and their luck. Last but certainly not least is Barbara Ward's "Education in a Free World."

Miss Ward, foreign editor of the Economist of London, came here in October to participate in a three-day conference on education at Wellesley. She argues that "education should once again reflect the moral order on which Western society was built," i. e., Greek thought and Christianity. More accurately, her thesis should be called "education for a free world," says Miss Ward, for without the right kind of education there will be no free society. Unless we restore the "vision of greatness," she explains, there are other visions, totalitarian ones, which will replace freedom.

BOB JOHNSTONE, a student at Lafayette College, Easton, Pa., believed that the major cause of wars was a lack of understanding between men. After he was killed in the last one, his family decided that his wishes would be best served by using his GI insurance to bring a Japanese youth here to study at his college. Robert Nishiyama, a former Kamikaze pilot, who was chosen, writes in the American "What America Means to Me."

UNDER MEDICINE, Time writes its cover story on the discoverer of streptomycin, Dr. Selman Waksman of Rutgers University. During the war winter of 1941-1942, a budget official suggested firing the "obscure Ukrainian-born microbiologist who was getting $4620 a year for 'playing around with microbes in the soil.'" Fortunately for all, Dean William H. Martin of the college of agriculture saved Dr. Waksman, relates Time. Two years later he made his discovery, which ranks next to penicillin among the antibiotics, and is the first drug to show hopeful results in the treatment of tuberculosis and incidentally has netted the university some two million dollars to date.

Different Roads Charted

A New Dimension Added To Foreign Policy Study

By Ferdinand Kuhn

MAJOR PROBLEMS OF UNITED STATES FOREIGN POLICY: 1949-1950. 492 pages. Brookings Institution. $3 cloth, $1.50 paper.

THE UNITED STATES IN WORLD AFFAIRS: 1949-1950. By John C. Campbell and the research staff of the Council on Foreign Relations. Introduction by Gen. George C. Marshall. 604 pages. Harper. $5.

AFTER only three years of publication, the Brookings volume on "Major Problems" has become the most useful American yearbook on foreign affairs. The student, the teacher and the inquiring citizen should find it invaluable.

It reviews the recent history of every major issue facing the United States abroad, and in most instances tells the story clearly and completely. This in itself should earn the Brookings staff a medal for public service.

Alternatives Suggested

BUT the unique merit of this book is of a different order. Its authors know that there are no easy choices in foreign policy. The Secretary of State must weigh many alternatives before he cables instructions to his representatives abroad, and he must know what the consequences of each choice will be.

So the Brookings writers are not content to summarize the past record; they try, too, to outline the alternative courses of action that are open to the United States in dealing with each problem. They put the reader in the position of the policy-maker, and they add a new dimension to the public understanding of foreign affairs.

The book is arranged like a sandwich. The top piece of bread—and it is pretty soggy—is a long introduction reviewing the course of events since the war and the broad bases of American policy in these troubled years. The bottom piece—very thick and only partly baked—is the detailed examination of three problems: Point Four, Indonesia, and European economic and political integration.

The meat of the book is in the middle section, with its brief history of each problem, a hint of the alternatives ahead, often an admirable map, and in every instance a useful list of references for further study.

Lapses Into Jargon

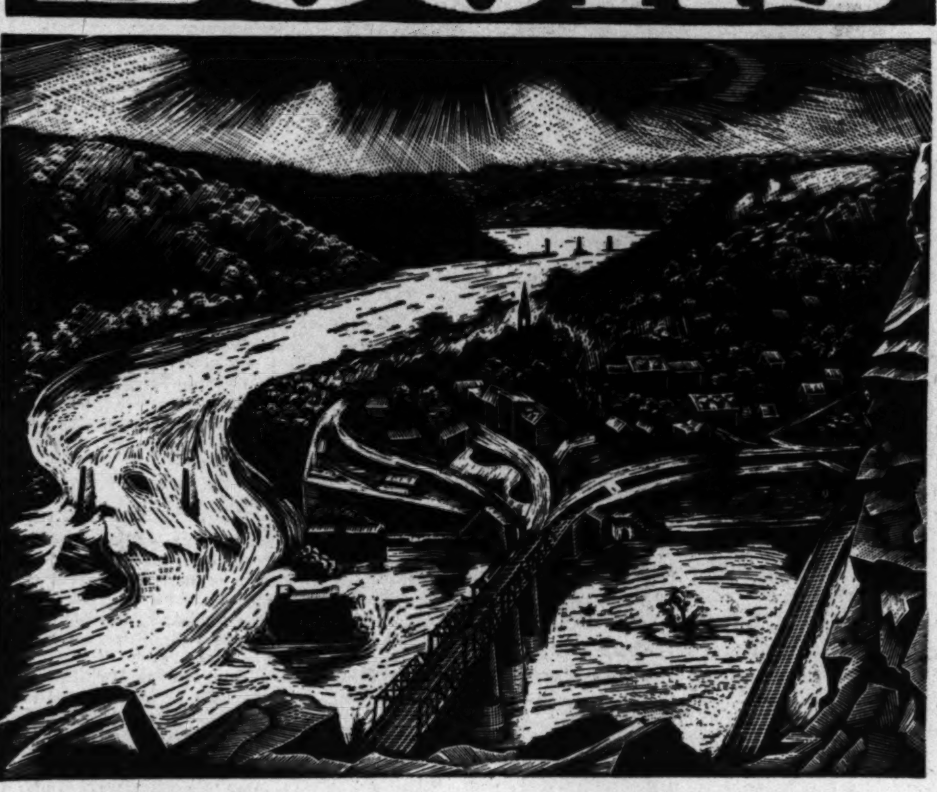
OF COURSE there are faults in a book that is still something of an experiment. There is too much emphasis on the United Nations, and on juridical or procedural solutions for practical problems. Where the book suggests solutions, they are too often timid and feeble. Wherever economic problems are discussed, the writing is full of jargon that ought to be cleaned up for the next edition.

The Brookings writers on economics could learn some lessons from the annual volume put out by the Council on Foreign Relations. This is a smooth and coherent chronicle of the year's events in all fields of foreign affairs. For reference purposes it is less useful, though more detailed, than the Brookings volume, but as contemporary history it is the best work in its field. General Marshall has written a lifeless introduction which falls far short of Dean Acheson's in the 1947-48 volume.

Texas Beanpatch

TEXAS has some huge ranches, but the largest in Texas, in fact the largest ever recorded in the whole country, was the three-million-acre XIT Ranch, whose history is retold in "Cattle Empire" by Lewis Nordyke (Morrow). Extending through nine Texas counties, and nearly four times the size of the State of Rhode Island, this vast holding came into being when a group of Chicagoans back in the '80s agreed to build the capitol at Austin in exchange for the land.

BOOKS



Harpers Ferry, a Mitchell Jamieson illustration for Frederick Gutheim's "The Potomac"

Wealth of Material Skillfully Winnowed

A Great 'Biography' of Potomac

By J. R. Wiggins

THE POTOMAC. By Frederick Gutheim. Rinehart. 436 pp. $4.

FREDERICK GUTHEIM'S story of the Potomac is one of the best of the 40 volumes in the river series.

It is a great story of the rivershed that is richer than any other in American legends. Readers will put it down with a new appreciation of the part this 390-mile watercourse has played in the unfolding American drama.

It is more difficult to chronicle the life of a river than it is to relate the life of a man. It is more troublesome to pull together the history of a watershed than it is to assemble the tale of a people or a nation. Nearly all the river authors have suffered from an embarrassment of riches. Wealth to suffocation must have been Gutheim's difficulty.

In one way, river books resemble biographies. They are likely to be most prized and most criticized by those who have known the subject. This is likely to be the fate of "The Potomac." It is so well done that every student of American life and every thoughtful resident of the Potomac region will wish to have the book. And most of them will be ready to advise the author of incidents and episodes that should have been included in it. Out of the mass of available material, however, he has skillfully selected for retelling the historical episodes that give the great valley significance and meaning.

Mr. Gutheim is one of four leading authors who will speak at The Washington Post's first Book and Author Luncheon of the season, to be held at the Statler at 1 p. m. Tuesday. The others are Merle Miller, Alice Tisdale Hobart and Hartzell Spence. Tickets are still available at book stores.

Sesquicentennial Tie-In

THE VOLUME most appropriately appears on the threshold of the sesquicentennial year.

Gutheim starts out with President Adams' arrival in Washington in June, 1800. The total number of Federal employes was 131. Treasury had 69, War 18, Navy 15, Postoffice 9 and State 7. It cost $15,293 to move the establishment.

The economic considerations that led George Washington to pick this site for the National Government are reviewed, and they sound impressive even now. (Crossroads of North-South communication, head of navigation, proximity to coal and metals, access to the interior.)

Gutheim then goes back to the beginnings of civilization in the valley; to the early explorations; to the first settlements in the Tidewater country—the Calverts, Cornwallis, Clocker, Fitzhugh, Carter and Margaret Brent; to the great Tidewater culture that grew up around tobacco; to the contributions of George Mason and Robert Carter.

He moves up the valley and on in time to the Upper Potomac and the entrepreneurial enterprises of Thomas Lee and the Ohio Company and the agricultural pioneering of John Binns, who saved Virginia wheat farming from the fate of Tideland tobacco cultivation.

The early industrial development of the valley is detailed. Most skillfully related are the stories of John Frederick Amelung's glass factory, the Harpers Ferry Ordnance Works, the Georges Creek Mining Co. and the iron foundries. Surprisingly modern is the Lonaconing Residency Act under which "an obligatory subscription of 50 cents (was) deducted from the monthly wage account to support a system of medical care."

Biographical Tidbits

THE STRANGE career of Francis Thomas is one of the many biographical bits that enrich Gutheim's book. Thomas entered public life in 1822 at the age of 23, when he was elected to the Maryland Assembly. By 1837 he was elected Governor, having acquired in the meantime a young wife (Sally McDowell, daughter of the Governor of Virginia) many years his junior. Her real or imagined flirtations broke up the match and ruined Thomas, who insisted upon broadcasting the story of his marital difficulties, going so far as to publish a circular he distributed to members of Congress.

The seaboard's race to tap the interior of the continent—by ship canal, national road and railroad—is magnificently told. Washington, putting its hope on the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal and the National Road, lost out to Baltimore and the Northeastern States. Gutheim speculates: "Had the logical Potomac route to the West been pushed through without quarreling and delays, the great port city of the Atlantic might well have been in Chesapeake Bay (instead of) in the New York metropolitan region."

"The Virginia Assembly," he observes, "was not joking when late in the eighteenth century it passed a resolution urging the merchants of Alexandria to bestir themselves lest the port of New York surpass them."

With a fine sense for the dramatic, Gutheim relates that "on July 4, 1828, the venerable Charles Carroll of Carrollton was laying the first stone of the railroad in Baltimore while President John Quincy Adams in Georgetown had removed his coat to turn over the first spadeful of soil for the canal."

The Potomac Valley's great part in the Civil War is not given the detailed attention of the hundreds of published works devoted to the military aspects of the campaign. Gutheim contents himself with adequate accounts of the three major Confederate invasions that crossed the valley—Lee's invasion of 1862, turned back at Antietam; the invasion of 1863, repulsed at Gettysburg, and Early's raid of 1864, which reached the environs of Washington.

A Kefauver Disciple

WASHINGTON inevitably occupies a lot of the Potomac story. The vicissitudes of municipal government are related in a chapter that gives Alexander Robey (Boss) Shephard more unadulterated praise than the great builder has received from some hands. The chaos of earliest local regimes is described. The author finally winds up where so many other thoughtful observers of the Washington scene have arrived, concluding that "Federal power must accept home rule and the franchise for Washington itself."

Of particular interest now, with the National Capital Park and Planning Commission's long-term plan about to emerge, is Gutheim's look ahead at the Washington of a century hence. He envisions a "'rurban city'," the larger portion of which would flow up the Potomac in thin ribbons of settlement, with lateral lines of development branching from the Potomac up the tributary valleys."

His fine concluding paragraphs are worth repeating.

"The genius of the Potomac lies in its balance. It is a microcosm—it has been called a microchaos—of the Nation. Lying between the ocean and the mountains, between the North and the South, its balance is epitomized in the profusion of plants, trees, birds, and wild life. On a foggy spring day the sea gulls are seen on the White House lawn; the mountain goldfinches rise in tiny yellow clouds along Rock Creek, and on a quiet evening in Lafayette Square you may find a small white owl. The foxtail pine of New England and the Southern sweet gum flourish equally. The balance of nature is faithfully reflected in the very climate, the landscape and the activities of man. Within a hundred miles of Washington can be found in miniature nearly every aspect of the Nation.

"In its history, the Potomac has been colored by the East and the West, the South and the North, and both the river valley and its principal city have become a cross-section of the Nation. Deliberately chosen as the seat of Government because it possessed these qualities, it has mirrored faithfully through the years of its history the preoccupations of the Nation.

Nutshell Reviews of Recent Books

THE LONG LOVE. By John Sedges. John Day. $3.

THE Seatons and the Haslatts are Massachusetts small-town families. The Seatons dress for dinner and the Haslatts turn their worn collars. Earnest young Edward Haslatt marries fun-loving Margaret Seaton, and her father sets them up, in housekeeping and business. They rear children, who rear children, and none of the conventional characters ever kicks over the traces, right up to the happy ending. This Literary Guild selection is a well-behaved novel packed with elements that stand high in the esteem of the reading public.

DOMESTIC MANNERS OF THE AMERICANS. By Mrs. Frances Trollope. Knopf. $4.

MRS. TROLLOPE, English gentlewoman, lived here and loathed it for three and one-half years, and for more than a century her notorious account of her visit has helped to sour us on all foreign busybodies. This handsome new edition includes a history on her adventures by Donald Smalley which enables us to check on her and also on ourselves. The result should be to make us more amused than indignant, and to wonder who should have sneered at whom. Mrs. Trollope began to find fault with her first sight of the muddy Mississippi polluting the Gulf, but her nastier criticisms were reserved for Cincinnati, where every man spat, hogs rooted in the garbage in the streets, and there were no amusements, no cards, no seemly church-going. But she was kinder to the settled East, and even paid tribute to the "magnificent" National Capitol and "the lovely and noble city" of New York. The original Auguste Nervieu illustrations are reproduced.

AS TALL AS PRIDE. By Sophie Kerr. Rinehart. $2.75.

GIFTED, ambitious, respected Rome Whitten is miserable because he is only 4½ feet tall. In his unhappiness, he depends increasingly on overgrown, mentally inferior Effie. When tall, rich, cruel Colles Mason falls in love with Effie, there is an explosion. And in its light the reader sees that it was Rome Whitten's agonizing over his shortcoming, rather than the shortcoming itself, which destroyed him. A readable tale.

A MOCKING BIRD SANG AT CHICKAMAUGA. By Alfred Leland Crabb. Bobbs-Merrill. $2.75.

THERE are too many mocking birds and too little plot in this novel of the Civil War battle, though espionage is its promising theme. But there are warm portraits of Generals Forrest, Bragg and Rosecrans and convincing characterizations of Confederate soldiers. The plot is actually made poorer by contrast with the earthy, robust troops.

THE PASSIONATE JOURNEY. By Irving Stone. Doubleday. $3.

JOHN NOBLE learned to drink and aspired to paint when he was a boy in Wichita. Still in his youth, he took his Stetson, two guns and his taste for oils, horses and liquor to Paris, where he won international recognition for some worthy if not distinguished paintings. His fantastically Bohemian life invites fictional treatment, but in this book the artistry, drunkenness and rowdiness seem synthetic.

An 8-Fold Better Life in 2049

By John J. Corson

CONTROLLING FACTORS IN ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT. By Harold G. Moulton. Brookings. $4.

HAROLD G. MOULTON, longtime president of the famed Brookings Institution, essays nothing less in this volume than to appraise the workings of our economic system and to chart the course of economic progress. On the basis of 30 years' study of the functioning of this Nation's economy, he, first, analyzes the errors in earlier economists' reasoning; second, appraises what is wrong today, and third, prescribes what is needed if this country is to support more people better in the future.

From the time of Adam Smith economists have feared that there would not be sufficient resources to care for a steadily growing population. And they feared that even though improved methods and machines were developed, the returns from agriculture and industry would not increase proportionately but tend to diminish. This distressing conclusion they named "the law of diminishing returns." No wonder their trade became known as the "dismal science."

Still Short-Sighted

THEY failed to foresee, Moulton contends, the vast improvements in technology and in economic organization which were to come. Ttogether, the great advances in machinery, power and chemistry, coupled with the development of corporations, large-scale businesses, new methods of finance and stable money and fiscal systems, made inoperative the law of diminishing returns. Those economists who today contend that we have reached a "mature economy" similarly fail to see the significance of these gains and others to come.

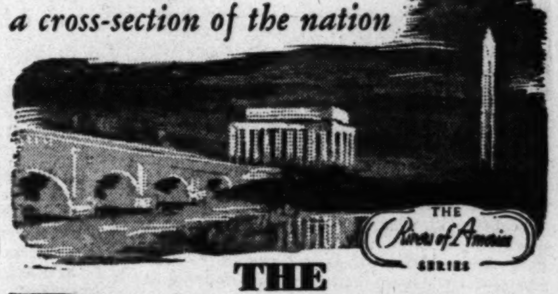
Then he looks forward. Will the United States Moulton asks, be able in 2049 to support a population of 300 millions and provide an eight-fold rise in living standards? He canvasses in turn the prospective needs in 2049 for food, shelter, attire, health, education, recreation, travel and metals. His analysis reads like Jules Verne. Yet it is supported by the scholar's thoroughness and regard for available fact. His conclusion is that with the possible exception of iron and steel, we have the resources to attain these goals.

But, he emphasizes, we must also have a satisfactory economic organization. He examines each of the four types of economic organization in the modern world: Communism, socialism, hybrid systems in which free enterprise is controlled by government, and the so-called laissez faire system. And the most significant part of this volume is devoted to weighing the economic organization we have—and should have.

HE LEAVES no doubt that, in his opinion, the free enterprise system, with a minimum of governmental control, will alone insure progress. It will always be subject to depressions. But it alone, he contends, preserves individual freedom and initiative and offers the maximum creative and driving force. Yet he also recognizes the need for improvements in its functioning and the especial importance of a progressive expansion of mass purchasing power. This will be accomplished best by steadily lowered prices as technological progress makes for efficiency and lower costs, he says.

The reader will find in this book a comprehensive expression of the modern day laissez faire economists.

A river of great destiny
a cross-section of the nation



THE Rivers of America SERIES

THE Potomac

By FREDERICK GUTHEIM Illustrated by Mitchell Jamieson

There's a fabulous history about the river that cradled this republic —

traditionally, it nourished the elegance and scandal of the Tidewater plantations . . .

industrially, it marked the growth of vital ironworks, fine glass, and a highway for commerce in the West . . .

nationally, it's the nerve center of a vigorous nation.

The Potomac is a plastic river, ever being shaped anew by restless nature and a dynamic society.

Hervey Allen says THE POTOMAC is "a fine book, a brilliant performance, a real piece of creative history."

THE YALTA CONFERENCE

HERE is the former Secretary of State's story of what really happened at Yalta . . . close-ups of the Big Three working together, measuring each other. It includes the one big blow-up of the meeting—by Churchill, not Stalin. And it reveals the truth about the so-called "secret deals" which changed the world.

NOTE:
This book, which Edward R. Stettinius, Jr., completed only a short time before his death, represents his last great public service. It was his belief that he had a responsibility to tell the American people these facts about the Yalta Conference which were known to him alone.

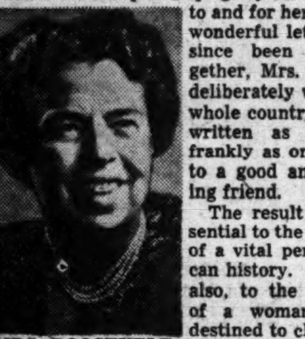
As Frank as a Letter to a Friend

Mrs. FDR Writes Vital History

THIS I REMEMBER. By Eleanor Roosevelt. Harper. $4.50.

THIS is the most revealing picture of life in the White House to come from the pen of a First Lady since Abigail Adams wrote about Washington life 150 years ago.



MRS. ROOSEVELT

While the sharp and sprightly Mrs. Adams wrote to and for her friends in the wonderful letters that have since been gathered together, Mrs. Roosevelt has deliberately written for the whole country. And she has written as candidly and frankly as one might write to a good and understanding friend.

The result is a book essential to the understanding of a vital period of American history. It is essential, also, to the understanding of a woman who seems destined to claim a place in the story of this generation, not only as the wife of a President, but as a politician and statesman, in her own right.

As history, it is much more rewarding than her personal first book and it is just about as helpful in conferring an insight into Mrs. Roosevelt's character. Many others may equal Mrs. Roosevelt in their ability to stand off and look at history, impersonally and objectively. Few rival her in her ability to stand off and look at herself as appraisingly and critically as if she were examining another person.

She can put up a good argument in her own defense, too, and frequently does, but she enters into controversy over her own behavior and over her husband's policies without personal bitterness.

Begins With Fateful Year

MRS. ROOSEVELT skims through the Roosevelt family's "private interlude" in opening chapters to get down to the Roosevelt political story in her fourth chapter. It is the events of the year 1928, so fateful for FDR's future, that really begin this volume.

This is no "disclosure" book. Much that is related is already public knowledge—or at least known to those who have observed the last 20 years with any attention. Its contribution is in its perspective and its point of view.

The Louis Howe story, for example, has no real surprises, but when Mrs. Roosevelt has told it, there is a little better perception of just what this gnome-like little man contributed to FDR as a man and as President, just a little better understanding of what a real deprivation it was to the Administration when Howe died.

Here and there Mrs. Roosevelt does set the record straight, correcting an established impression on the authorship of a speech or the origin of a policy. The alteration of previously published accounts is not spectacular.

Mrs. Roosevelt makes an accounting of some of the "do-gooder" enterprises that brought the most public reproach to her and to the Administration. She admits the rather dismal financial failure of some of them but is inclined to excuse practical errors as she dismissed the homestead project: "The human values were most rewarding, even if the financial returns to the Government were not satisfactory."

This is the sort of argument that will further endear her to those who like her for her always good intentions; as it will provoke those who feel this is precisely the fatal flaw of much New Deal experimentation. She does not concede that there is a necessity for being both "pure as a dove and wise as a serpent."

Mrs. Roosevelt is at some pains to explain her attitude toward the American Youth Congress during the days when Joe Lash was its leader. It is once again an explanation of "good intentions," but at least she drew from the experience a caution that (as she points out) has since stood her in good stead. She may have been naive about Communist infiltration before the Youth Congress interlude, but she certainly is not so any longer.

'Consciousness of Waste'

THE Roosevelt family difficulties for which she has been so much scolded she does not attempt to excuse away. Clearly she deserves more sympathy than reproach for the marital crises of her children.

Another family problem, the shortcomings of her brother, Hall Roosevelt, she candidly and frankly discusses. Of his death she writes: ". . . . the loss of someone whom you love is hard to bear, but when sorrow is mixed with regret and a consciousness of waste, there is added a touch of bitterness which is even more difficult to carry day in and day out." Only those Roosevelt haters who never have given such family hostages to fortune will have the courage to take any satisfaction from such difficulties.

For her many trips abroad during the war, Mrs. Roosevelt makes only modest claims. The disruption occasioned by the visits of VIPs to combat theaters is something of which she seems aware. She certainly tried to achieve enough to justify these expeditions. The gains in these areas, measured in morale and good will, are so intangible that no one can expect agreement on the net balance.

In the description of the closing months of the President's life, there are some valuable disclosures. There is an indignant denial that FDR suffered any strokes prior to the fatal seizure. There is a report of the physical examinations that preceded the last FDR campaign. It seems to give the lie to those who have argued that the country should have been informed of a physical decline that was concealed from the voters. On the whole, however, the picture of the President's condition and mental state, in the last months, is that of a man declining more rapidly than the country knew.

There is also reiteration of the previously reported diminution of the President's faith in the integrity of Marshal Stalin. Altogether it is a tragic account—the great man declining in his physical powers, losing his buoyant spirit, slackening in his mental vigor, abandoning some of his highest hopes as he moves toward the final curtain. A figure of such gallantry really deserved to leave the stage in the midst of fulfillment.

Perhaps, in the long view of history, the end will seem less grim.

'Life as It Happens'

FOR what it takes to sustain the spirit in the midst of adversity, turn to the closing pages of Eleanor Roosevelt's book. Here she puts into print the philosophy that made it possible for her to adjust to trials that would have dismayed weaker folk.

". . . A man," she writes, "must be what he is, life must be lived as it is, circumstances force your children away from you, and you cannot live at all if you do not learn to adapt yourself to your life as it happens to be."

She learned to "adapt" herself to life "as it happened to be." Her book will increase the admiration and respect of the millions of Americans who regard her as the foremost woman of our time. Probably it will not alter the views of those who always have chosen to question her good intentions, belittle her accomplishments and denounce her activities. Neither group's clamorous opinions are likely to influence very much the direction of an American whose course, right or wrong, has been set too long to yield to shifting winds and tides of popular condemnation or approval.

Hammurabi to Toynbee

Book Digest Thesaurus 'Finest Ever Published'

By Sterling North

THESAURUS OF BOOK DIGESTS. Edited by Hiram Haydn and Edmund Fuller. Crown. 381 pp. $5.

LET'S SUPPOSE that you managed to read 50 books a year for 40 reading years. Let us also suppose that you were a good enough critic to have selected the best books from a score of languages covering the history of the written word, from the Code of Hammurabi (Circa 2067 B. C.) to "A Study of History" by Arnold Toynbee, or from Euripides' "Medea" to Arthur Miller's "Death of a Salesman."

Let us further suppose that you made intelligent digests of all you had read, arranged them alphabetically by title, and prepared both an author's index and an index of characters for cross reference. What you would have after that interesting lifetime of labor would be something not unlike the "Thesaurus of Book Digests," upon which some 15 experts under the editorial direction of Hiram Haydn and Edmund Fuller have been working for several years.

Biblical Masterpiece

THIS IS, without a doubt, the finest reference work of its sort ever published. Instead of the usual dry, hacked-out paragraphs on the books covered, there is real evidence of a mastery of each subject and author. The nine-page digest of the Bible (presumably by Samuel Terrien of Union Theological Seminary, who is listed as Bible editor) is a little masterpiece of critical condensation. And nowhere will you find better resumes of Shakespeare's thickly - plotted, many-peopled plays than in this book.

Hiram Haydn is himself a scholar well versed in the Renaissance and the Elizabethan era, so books from the cultural flowering of those years are richly handled. French, German, Italian, Dutch and Russian literatures each rate an expert, as do such specialized departments as the classics from Hebrew, the Oriental tongues and the Eastern European nations.

Science, philosophy and religion—perhaps the three most difficult subjects to handle in a book of this kind—are treated with a combination of erudition and masterful simplicity.

In all except contemporary literature the editors had relatively foolproof methods for checking their own judgments. Lists of great books are at least as numerous as the professors who teach courses in great books. If a book or an author is still being read, referred to or quoted, you will find him (with few exceptions) in this thesaurus.

Parkman Ignored

BUT THE contemporary material is sure to be more controversial. For instance, the editors have felt it necessary to include many best-selling modern authors who will soon be forgotten. Occasionally there is a real oversight, as in the case of Francis Parkman, America's great historian, who is not even mentioned in a cross-reference. Meanwhile half a page is given to Charles Beard, whose star was waning long before his death.

It may also seem a trifle silly to devote as much space to a mountebank like Gertrude Stein as is given to an important philosopher like William James. And I distinctly disagree with the flattering opinion here given of the traitorous pseudo-intellectual poet, Ezra Pound.

Undoubtedly, use of this volume over a period of years will uncover other flaws and other virtues. But on the basis of eight or ten hours of liberal sampling in all its departments, I am already certain that this "Thesaurus of Book Digests" will go on the shelf which holds my most useful reference works. It is accurate, readable and (on the whole) critically sound.

A Tool of the People

Freedom No Catchword To 'Appraisers' of U. S.

YEARS OF THE MODERN: An American Appraisal, edited by John W. Chase. Longmans, Green. 354 p. $3.50.

"Years of the modern years of the unperformed
"Your horizon rises, I see it parting away for more august dramas . . .
"What historic denouements are these we so rapidly approach?"

THUS, and more, wrote Walt Whitman. Twelve modern Americans have taken Whitman's challenge as a starting point for a "creative inventory of our times."

It is an inventory because the book appraises modern man and his resources at this time of world crisis; it is creative because the 12 authors bring original thinking to bear on the "unperformed" America.

Historian Henry Steele Commager assesses our national character; J. K. Galbraith of Harvard examines the American economy; Atomic Scientist Harrison Brown its problems of science and technology; Editor Canham of the Christian Science Monitor its communications; Brig. Gen. C. T. Yanham the military; the late Sumner Welles and Norman Cousins the questions of world order.

The Zeal of Fear

THE recurring theme, keynoted by Washington Post Editorial Writer Alan Barth, is the usefulness of American freedom, freedom as a working tool. Citing the Government loyalty program and the investigations of the House Committee on Un-American Activities, Barth finds that "the most serious threat to the American system today lies in the reckless zeal of fearful men who would forfeit the essential values of that very system on the pretext of assuring its safety."

Perry Miller warns of this danger in the field of education: If discovery is suppressed through fear of heresy, the American practice of diffusion of knowledge "will become an assembly line for the production of serviceable robots."

Freedom has long been circumscribed in the economic field, according to Washington Lawyer Walton Hamilton. The trend toward monopoly and the accompanying regulation by commission stifle the newcomer, the innovator, the business radical. "The industrial imperium may have many virtues," he writes; "it is not, in any way, American."

'Autonomous Person'

CAN modern man, specifically the American, on whom the burden of leadership rests, meet the challenge, assert his freedom, and use it as a tool for building a world capable and worthy of survival? The writers say yes. David Riesman of Yale, in the chapter, "The Saving Remnant," defines the "autonomous" person who, capable of conscious self-direction, can "become a social force . . . by converting present helplessness into a condition of advance."

The new society whose foundations autonomous people could build may be the Welfare State, outlined by Alvin Johnson. The one difference he finds between all vanished civilizations and our own is the growing concern of western civilization for the common man.. "Is not the Welfare State a conception of genius," he asks, "the genius of the whole underlying population?"

The admitted conflicts of views in the exciting book serve to heighten the importance of the great area of common concern which these 12 distinguished Americans have explored. To them, freedom is not an orator's byword but the pragmatic method of democratic survival.

Notes on the Margin

By Lee Grove

RICHARD HIRSCH of 4116 Arkansas ave. nw., is the author of a new book from Duell, Sloan—"Crimes That Shook the World."

Hirsch tells the story of 10 crimes with political overtones, including such incidents as the snatching of Sun Yat-sen by the London embassy of the Imperial Chinese Government in 1896, the murder of the Archduke Franz Ferdinand at Sarajevo in 1914, and the assassination of Gandhi.

Hirsch's preceding book, "The Soviet Spies," published in 1947, achieved magazine condensation, translation into a number of foreign languages and movie purchase.

A professional writer for about 15 years, Hirsch specializes in true crime stories, and is a staff writer for True Detective Story Magazine.

Despite this preoccupation with crime, however, Hirsch takes a strict view of it. He has no sympathy with writers like the late Edmund Pearson, author of "Studies in Murder."

"They are all right," he says, "but they are taking very awful stuff and dancing rather cutely to the music."

Hirsch's own "favorite" type of crime? If he has to make a choice, it is the "confidence" crime. "It deals mostly with property instead of life, and has a certain intriguing value."

Ancient Latin

DR. JOHN F. LATIMER, professor of Latin and Greek at George Washington University, is doing research for a history of early Latin and Greek textbooks written and printed in the United States.

The earliest of which he knows is anonymous, "A Short Introduction to the Latin Tongue," published in 1709 and purporting to be based on the teaching system of Ezekiel Cheever.

Cheever, the most famous of the Colonial schoolmasters, came to the United States in 1637, and the following year began teaching at what is now New Haven. After spells of teaching at Ipswich and Charlestown, he settled down at the Boston Latin School, where he remained from 1671 to 1708, when he gave up teaching a few months before his death at the age of 94. A former pupil at the Boston Latin School, Cotton Mather, preached the funeral sermon.

All told, Cheever taught 70 consecutive years in the United States— an all-time record, Dr. Latimer believes.

Mal de Mer

AFTER four books of the sea, John Philips Cranwell, of 125 3d st. ne., is thinking about doing a biography about a landlubber. Nothing definite yet, though.

Cranwell's first book had its origin when he started out to write a feature story for the Baltimore Sun, on which he was then working, and could not find the material. The book turned out to be "Men of Marque," a history of privateering out of Baltimore in the War of 1812. William B. Crane of Baltimore collaborated in the writing.

That same year, 1940, came "Spoilers of the Sea," a history of surface raiding from the Civil War to the Graf Spee, and, in 1941, a theoretical work, "Destiny of Sea Power." More recently, in 1947, came "United States Navy Waterline Models and How to Build Them," on which Samuel A. Smiley, also of Washington, collaborated.

The long interval between "Destiny of Sea Power" and the book on ship models was due to the war, in which Cranwell served—in the Army.

Captain Karig's Ark Is a Happy Command

THE PIG IN THE PARLOR. By the Karigs. Rinehart. 177 pp. Ill. $2.50.

CAPT. WALTER KARIG courted Eleanor with the aid of a bantam rooster that loved being hurled into the air like a football and would then glide to earth.

Ever since then—"for nearly 30 years"—the adventuresome Navy captain and his family have been living with animal life of one kind or another—not only dogs, cats and horses, but bulbuls, bulgerahs and other forms of life not common to Fairfax County, Va.

In "The Pig in the Parlor"—a literal fact at one time—Walter and Eleanor and their daughters, Patricia and Keatings, and Pat's children, Alexis and Robin—with unabashed enthusiasm tell of their life with animals in a book happily free of cant and sentimentality.

"We—all of us—love animals, but we shy like a horse from those who proclaim themselves 'animal lovers,'" says Mrs. Karig, adding, "Neither do we belong to the other extreme, that group of humanity which owns animals for the sake of possession."

All the members of this household contribute their bit to "The Pig in the Parlor," including Alexis, age 8 (who says, "The best pets are blue-tailed skinks. When you catch them, they make their tails come off."), and Robin, age 5 (who says, "I like animals best that have fuzz on them, rabbits and squirrels and horses and all fuzzy things.").

Robin also likes chicks, but another member of the family finds chickens stinky. One suspects other differences in enthusiasms, as might be expected, but an overwhelming tolerance of all things that live, including nonfeathered bipeds, characterizes the book.

The Karigs and their near-human colleagues manage a very democratic joint existence, and if, as has been said, their home must at times be like the Ark—well, it sounds as if the captain had a happy ship.—LEE GROVE.

Duggan Was Practical Idealist

By Kathleen L. Barber

THE AMERICAS. By Laurence Duggan. Holt. 242 pp. $3.

IN THIS book, which Laurence Duggan was writing at the time of his tragic death on December 20, 1948, the idealism for which his associates respected and loved him will live on. Not for idealism alone will he be known, however, for the program of active inter-American collaboration which his book outlines is not only intensely practical but flatly necessary for the economic and political progress and the long range basic security of the Western Hemisphere.

For 14 years in the State Department, Mr. Duggan was one of the architects of Roosevelt's Good Neighbor policy toward the 20-odd Latin-American republics. From 1944 on, he continued his constructive work in this field through UNRRA and as director of the Institute of International Education.

The importance of this book lies in its appearance at a crucial time in the relationships of the United States with its Southern neighbors.

Development of a regional system has progressed rapidly since Franklin Roosevelt's policy first began to dispel the century-old fear of United States intervention and imperialism among the Latin-American countries. Since the war, however, deterioration and neglect have left American policy in serious need of the kind of stock-taking Laurence Duggan does in his compact volume.

The people, the land and the productive facilities of South and Central America are assessed in a historical summary. Reaching into the future, Mr. Duggan demonstrates that continuing to encourage political democracy without assisting in the urgent work of transition from a feudal to a modern economy can bring only superficial results.

The Nation's loss in creative leadership through the author's death is evident in his mature proposal for an "association specifically to extend assistance, technical, managerial and financial, to the other American republics for the improvement of their economic life and their education, health, housing and allied fields."

If Mr. Duggan had lived another month he would have seen in President Truman's inaugural address the beginning of a national policy to extend such assistance to underdeveloped areas everywhere.

This book needs to be widely read, both as a simple statement of the basic facts of inter-American relations and as a piece of original thinking about how a lasting regional system of the Americas may be achieved.

Unbeaten Virginia Upsets Penn, 26-14; 7th in Row

VIRGINIA'S RALPH SHOAF GOES OVER THE GOALLINE FOR FIRST TOUCHDOWN IN SMASHING 26-14 VICTORY OVER PENN YESTERDAY IN PHILAELPHIA

Michels Paces 1st Win In 16 Games of Series

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 5.—With the tenacity of their Confederate forebears, but with infinitely more success, Virginia's Cavaliers repulsed the Yankees from Pennsylvania today to keep their football record unsullied.

A two-touchdown underdog to be carried back to Ole Virginny with their first defeat of the season the underrated Cavaliers slapped down the Quakers, 26 to 14, before 50,771 Franklin Field spectators.

More than 10,000 Virginians, most of them waving Confederate flags and shouting the rebel yell of defiance, watched Coach Art Guepe's spirited swifties score their seventh straight victory. It was their first in 15 tries against the Quakers and easily the most monumental triumph in the 62-year football history of Thomas Jefferson's school.

Never in the 59-year history of the Virginia-Penn series had a Cavalier team scored more than 7 points. Today, the invaders had almost doubled that by the end of the first quarter when they led, 13-0.

When the final gun sounded, thousands of Virginians swarmed down on the field for an assault against the goal posts. An equal number of Pennsylvania defenders met the charge and a 20-minute miniature riot ensued with the Southerners finally winning out, tearing down the standards and lugging them from the park as a symbol of their football team's mightiest triumph.

For the first time this year, it was not Fullback Johnny Papit who until today was the Nation's leading runner who engineered the Cavalier triumph. Playing his role of decoy perfectly, Papit, Philadelphia youngster, stepped aside while cotton-headed Quarterback Whitey Michels and Halfback Steve Osisek plastered the Quakers with their second straight licking.

38	Punting avg. from scrimmage	32

2	Opponents' fumbles recovered	1
10	Yards lost by penalties	25

Mixing his plays with the skill of a professional veteran and passing with unerring accuracy, Michels passed to Osisek for the second tally and tossed to the Pennsylvania-born Osisek for the touchdown, which gave the Cavaliers their 19-0 halftime margin.

Until today, Michels had been content to hand off to "Rapid" Papit and watch the 190-pound Philadelphian churn for a 7-yards-per-try average.

But in Virginia's finest football hour, the 160-pound West Virginian hoodwinked the Quakers with his artful generalship and precision passing.

While Papit, who carried the ball only seven times the first half,

On Next: The Great Agganis!

—With Shirley Povich

THE FOOTBALL player of the year? Up Boston way, there is no confusion on that point. He is Harry Agganis, the passing-running-kicking quarterback and one-man gang who is lifting Boston University to its first eminence as a football power.

POVICH

With each succeeding Saturday, what was Agganis' purely localized fame in New England has been burgeoning all over the football landscape. By birth he is Greek-American; by performance he has been All-American.

Only a sophomore, Agganis is taking dead aim at the all-time record of 22 touchdown passes thrown in a single season, and taking the Boston U. team with him to what may be its first unbeaten year. But throwing touchdown passes is only one of the chores by which the handsome, 6-foot-1, 190-pounder earns his keep at Boston U.

Thanks to Agganis, Boston U. last week had eclipsed Notre Dame as the No. 1 offensive power of the Nation with an average of 443.4 yards gained per game, 9 more than the Irish could average.

Maryland University meets up with Agganis next Saturday in Fenway Park, Boston, and thanks to the 19-year-old quarterback who has been making the B. U. attack move, it's a game of special importance. It will be Agganis' stiffest test, in fact, because in Maryland, B. U. will be meeting the team with the Nation's second-best ground defenses.

Though a mere sophomore, Agganis has the poise of a pro, as Coach Buff Donelli learned even before the fellow played his first varsity game. That was before the kick-off in the opening game with Syracuse when Donelli, the old pro coach, couldn't beat back his own traces of nervousness.

"I had the yips, I guess, and was showing it," relates Donelli. "Then Agganis taps me on the shoulder and says, 'Nothing to worry about, coach, just tell us how many points you need.' It was the first time I ever had a player of mine tell me, the coach, to keep cool."

Agganis wasn't promising anything he couldn't deliver. He threw two touchdown passes, sent B. U. backs galloping for two more, and launched B. U.'s season with a 28-14 victory. He hasn't been stopped

Irish Whip Mich. State By 34 to 21

East Lansing, Mich., Nov. 5 (AP). Unbeaten Notre Dame got its stiffest argument of the season, but unleashed the versatility of Quarterback Bob Wiliams for a 34-21 triumph over Michigan State here today before 51,277 upset-hopeful fans.

In a game that was expected to menace seriously the Notre Dame string of 33 straight games without defeat, the Irish nonchalantly punched across two touchdowns in the second period, another in the third and two more in the fourth for their sixth win of the season.

Michigan State, an inspired but outplayed team today, pushed across two touchdowns on desperation passes in the closing minutes to score the most points Notre Dame has yielded in a single afternoon since the 28-27 squeak past Purdue in the 1948 season opener.

Undefeated Fordham Takes 35-0 Lacing in 'Brawl' Game'

By Shirley Povich
Post Reporter

West Point, N. Y., Nov. 5.—Arnold Galiffa's forward passes bombed Fordham off the unbeaten list today in a 35-0 Army victory that was more a brawl game than ball game.

Referee George A. Forbes stepped off 23 penalties against the teams in an attempt to curb the flagrant fist-slinging and illegal use of hands. At the end of the first half, he intercepted Coaches Earl Blaik and Ed Danowski as they left the field and demanded they calm their players before the game resumed.

Just before the second quarter ended the referee's patience with the rough demonstrations gave out completely, and he banished Army guard Charlie Galloway and Fordham end Tommy Dolan from the game.

Unbeaten Army, its ground game thwarted by the hefty but green Fordham team, turned to the aerial lanes to turn the game into a rout, after being held scoreless for the first 26 minutes of play before a capacity crowd of 27,100 in Michie Stadium.

Galiffa completed only eight of the 18 passes he threw, but four of them were for touchdowns with Halfback Jim Cain his target of three scoring pitches, in a field denuded of Fordham defenders by Cain's slick maneuvering. Hank Foldberg was the receipient of the other scoring heave.

Sub Halfback Jack Martin was the prime mover in the Army touchdown that lifted the score to 28-0 in the opening minutes of the second half. He turned Fordham's right end and fled 50 yards to the Fordham 5 before he was hauled down from behind by Dick McCaffrey, a Fordham defensive stalwart all day. Gil

Middies Rock Tulane in 21-21 Battle

By Jack Walsh
Post Reporter

New Orleans, Nov. 5.—Brilliant passing by Navy's Bob Zastrow matched equally brilliant running by Tulane's Eddie Price and provided a 21-21 tie today that was as thrilling a game as ever rocked the Sugar Bowl.

A frenzied homecoming crowd of 65,111 saw Price all but break Navy's back with touchdown runs of 67 and 25 yards. He made the other scores, too, from inches out after setting it up with sensational jaunts of 52 and 23 yards.

But the three-touchdown underdog Middies weren't out of it with Zastrow supplying an All-America passing exhibition that was just as valuable as Price's All-America running.

Courageous Navy finally was rewarded in the last two and one-

Lavine Tallies Once, Hurls 3 Touchdowns

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

Maryland broke George Washington's back with a 26-point second quarter and the high-powered Terrapins ran off with a 40-14 victory yesterday before 15,641 at College Park.

It was the fourth Southern Conference win against no losses for the Old Liners and gave them a tie for the championship with North-Carolina.

The underdog Colonials fought the Terps to a 0-0 standstill for the first quarter and scored as many points, 14, as the Terps did in the second half.

But in the last eight minutes of the second quarter, relief Quarterback Stan Lavine passed the Terps to two touchdowns, scored one and set up a fourth.

Taking over from regular Quarterback Joe Tucker again in the fourth quarter, Lavine got off his third touchdown pass and Bob (Shoo Shoo) Shemonski reeled off a 76-yard touchdown run on a kick-off return.

For the day, Lavine completed 12 out of 17 passes for 207 yards, and found a good battery mate in Stan Karnash, rugged 190-pound end from Glasgow, Pa. Karnash grabbed two of Lavine's touchdown tosses and caught five others for 123 yards.

Bill Szanyi, lanky G. W. end was on the receiving end of touchdown passes from Andy Davis in the third quarter and Jack Tivnan the fourth.

Long-legged Tivnan, 180-pound soph from Wayland, Mass., was G.W.'s surprise star. He has been Davis' understudy at tailback all season for the Colonials. But when the Terps bottled up Davis and his running mate, Al DuGoff, today, Tivnan stepped into the limelight.

Only then, when Tivnan seemed to falter, did Davis step in and snap a pass to Szanyi, who shook off Terp Jim LaRue on the goal line and scored.

Later in the fourth quarter, when Maryland had increased its margin to 40-7, Tivnan again powered the Colonials on a long drive, and this time, he was on the pitching end of the touchdown play. The drive carried 48 yards to the

Tar Heels' Rally Overcomes W. & M., 20-14

Billy Hayes' Fourth Down Pass Decides

Williamsburg, Va., Nov. 5 (AP).—End Art Weiner saw to it personally here today that the University of North Carolina remained in the running for the Southern Conference football championship as the Tar Heels won a gruelling uphill battle in biting cold from William and Mary's Indians, 20-14.

STATISTICS

7	Yards lost by penalties	57

A capacity crowd of more than 21,000 fans watched the Tar Heels, smarting from successive lickings by Louisiana State and Tennessee, roll from behind twice. There were only three minutes left when the Tar Heels finally overhauled the underdog Indians for keeps.

The payoff drive covered 59 yards and ended with Billy Hayes of Arlington, Va., throwing a 13-yard, fourth down pass that found Weiner waiting in the end zone. Egbert Williams, a big sophomore tackle, made good on his second of three conversion attempts.

Behind by 7-0 at half time, the Tar Heels lost no time taking command of the situation as the third period got under way. A fumble by Tribe Fullback Ed Magdziak of the second-half kickoff was recovered for Carolina on the Indians' 19-yard ribbon by End Ed Bilpuch. After Hayes had picked up 3 and Carolina lost 5 on an offside penalty, Charlie Justice whipped a 21-yard pass to Fullback George Verchick in the end zone for the Tar Heels' first touchdown. Williams' kick tied up the game.

Justice, bottled up most of the first half, put the Tar Heels ahead a moment later. The Choo-Choo, who hadn't been able to score against the Tribe in three previous meetings, pulled in Joseph (Buddy) Lex's punt on his 25, wheeled to the right and set sail down the side line. Justice sifted through the mass of Indians and End Kenny Powell knocked Lex—the last man who had a chance to get him—out of the way at the William and Mary 30.

That put Carolina out front, 13-7. But the Indians were to make one more bid for the ball game. They moved 83 yards on Lex's passing. His fourth-down pass from the 3 to Magdziak was good for a touchdown. Lex split the uprights to put the Indians ahead, 14-13.

William and Mary took a 7-0 lead early in the first period when Lex fired a 29-yard pass behind the goal line to End Ragazzo. It was the twelfth time this season Ragazzo had hauled in a touchdown pass.

Gobblers Tied By W. & L., 6-6

Lynchburg, Va., Nov. 5 (AP).—It was a case of almost—but not quite—today for Virginia Tech's woe-begone Gobblers.

After leading for nearly two quarters, the Techmen allowed heavily favored Washington and Lee to score a touchdown in the last 45 seconds of play which gave the Generals a 6-6 tie before 7000 frostbitten fans in Municipal Stadium.

As a result, Tech's skein of winless games was extended to 18

Tech scored midway the third period when Halfback Chip Collum skirted right end for nine yards. Ralph Beard missed the extra point,

Washington and Lee plowed 68 yards to the tying touchdown in the fourth period. Gil Bocetti, ace W.&L. quarterback, put the ball across from one foot out. That put the pressure on Walt Michaels, the fullback place-kicker.

Michaels wasn't up to the task. His try for the vital extra point sailed to the right of the goal posts.

Caps Thump St. Louis By 81 to 69

By Bill Burnett
Post Reporter

The Washington Caps found a way to stop "Easy Ed" MacAuley, All-America from St. Louis University, and rolled to their second straight victory of the young National Basketball Association season last night at Uline Arena.

To beat the highly regarded St. Louis Bombers, 81-69, all the Caps had to do was split the guarding of MacAuley between Jack Nichols and Chuck Halbert—and sink all but five of their 38 shots from the foul line.

A crowd of 3427 customers saw the Caps get off to a slow start but come back for an even game until intermission. Then they went ahead, 35-34, on Chuck Gilmur's single-pointer and there they stayed. After five minutes of the third period Washington had a 10-point lead and it was never headed despite two desperate Bomber rallies.

MacAuley's 13 points were the big factor in St. Louis' first-half effort. But when Nichols and Halbert went to work on him he could manage for only four foul shots from halftime until 11:14 of the final period, when he chalked up his only second-half field goal.

His 19 points were still high enough for scoring honors. But Nichols was only a single point behind as he led Cap scoring.

St. Louis' Johnny Logan who, with Red Rocha and Ace Maughan, was waved out of action on personal fouls in the final period, wound up third high with 15 points. Next came the Caps' new coach, Bob Feerick, who tallied 12 points in his first appearance of the season as a player—and tied with teammate Freddie Scolari in the production department.

While Washington's huskier but slightly shorter crew was registering 33 points from the foul line, and missing only five, the Bombers were having a miserable time hitting from 15 feet out. They sank 23 single-pointers but missed a total of 16, easily enough to have swung the game their way.

Tribe Hopes to Repeat Victory Over Steelers

They're calling the Redskins 7-point favorites in their Griffith Stadium tiff with the Pittsburgh Steelers today, but the chances are that a field goal—or lack of one—will make the difference one way or another.

If the teams run true to form, either Dick Poillon or Joe Glamp will enter the game at one stage, see that the ball is going to be placed correctly, take two steps and decide whether Washington gets its third or Pittsburgh its fifth victory in seven games for each outfit this season.

It's wound up like that in four of the last seven meetings

The 3-point rivalry started in 1946 in Turk Edwards' first year as head coach of the Redskins. Poillon kicked the field goal that would have broken a 14-14 tie with the Steelers, but Quarterback Jack Jacobs was late leaving the field and the effort was voided by a penalty.

The next year it was Glamp's turn at failure. After a wild and woolly affair, in which the lead changed hands eight times, Washington led by 27-26. The big Steeler halfback had just 25 seconds left when he tried for three big points from the 29-yard line. The ball hit the crossbar and bounced back onto the playing field.

Last season both games between the Eastern Division rivals were settled by field goals. In the first Poillon kicked a 28-yarder with 20 seconds to go, winning by 17-14. In the second, at Pittsburgh, Glamp had four penalty-allowed tries in the last minute, finally connecting from the 12-yard line for a 10-7 triumph.

Field Goal May Decide If Form Runs True

It's this year's first engagement between Washington and Pittsburgh that has the oddsmakers favoring the Redskins. They won that one, 27-14, with as nice a comeback as you could hope to see.

Gavilan Thinks Bout He Lost To 'Unknown' Foe Was Fixed

Detroit, Nov. 5 (AP).—Kid Gavilan declared today that he thought the disputed fight he lost to Lester Felton was fixed.

He made the statement at a boxing commission hearing. Afterwards he was taken with his managers and handlers to police headquarters for a lie detector test.

The Cuban welterweight was questioned as police stepped up an investigation into the October 21 bout here. Police Commissioner Harry S. Toy said new evidence uncovered in a raid on a gambling club strengthened the possibility of a betting deal in the fight.

He introduced the name of Harry Fleisher, notorious fugitive hoodlum. Police are checking Fleisher's connection, if any, with the raided club.

Officers said results of the Gavilan lie detector tests will not be announced until they have been studied further. Gavilan's co-managers, Angel Lopez and Fernando Ballido; his second, Ray Arcel, and trainer Mundico Medina were also given tests.

Gavilan testified he heard Referee Morrie Sherman tell Felton something at the end of the sixth or seventh round.

"I think he told Felton to make a point," Gavilan said, speaking through an interpreter.

Wake Forest Drubs Duke By 27 to 7

Durham, N. C., Nov. 5 (AP).—A hard-hitting Wake Forest football team whipped Duke, 27-7, here today to hand the Blue Devils their worst defeat by a Wake Forest team in 25 years.

The scoring ice was broken in the second period as Wake Forest rolled 57 yards, the last 18 being covered by Halfback Bill Gregus who burst through into the clear and stepped over untouched.

A Duke fumble led to the Wake Forest's second score seconds later. Tailback Billy Cox fumbled when hit trying to pass and Tackle Jim Stanton recovered on the 4 for the Deacons. On second down Fullback Bill Miller powered through from the 2.

Then Soph Tailback Glenn Wild came into the game for Duke in electrifying fashion. In four plays, with Wild passing, three were completed for 75 yards and a score. He hit Halfback Fred Schoonmaker who caught the ball on the 15 and ran over.

Late in the third period Wake Forest got a 93-yard drive under way. Gregus and Miller bit big chunks in relentless fashion and in 22 plays they had their third touchdown early in the final period. Gregus smashed over from the 2.

Wild tried to pass Duke back into contention, but Halfback Bob Jones intercepted on the Blue Devil 33 and ran all the way.

Frank Cavallo came in to boot both the G. W. extra points. The loss snapped the Colonials' three-game losing streak and gave them a 3-4 record. The Terrapins have six wins in seven games.

Guard Dave Shiver, Tackle Clarence Drayer, and Quarterback Joe Kennelly led a hard-charging G.W. line, which in the first 22 minutes stopped Maryland's squad of backs, led by Tucker.

Midway in the second quarter, Lavine took over for Tucker and by halftime, he had completed 8 out of 11 tosses.

Lavine led the Terps 34 yards to G. W.'s 45. There, Karnash wrenched a Lavine pass from the grasp of G. W.'s Walt Savage and raced to the 5. On third down, Lavine pitched wide to Ed Modzelewski, who outflanked the G. W. line for the first touchdown. Bob Deane place-kicked the extra point. He had four out of six altogether.

Lavine Finds Target

The next Terrapin march carried 59 yards with a Lavine-to-Karnash slant covering the last 20. Karnash outwrestled Jim Kline for that one.

Terp Center Jake Rowden intercepted a Davis pass a minute later to set up touchdown No. 3 on the Colonials' 20. Lavine faked a pass on the seven, and ran over right tackle for the score.

Capping the 26-point second quarter, La Rue intercepted another Davis toss and raced 24 yards to GW's 36. Another 20-yard pass, Lavine to Karnash, all alone in the end zone, paid off.

With Tucker back in the lineup in the third period, the Terps again didn't move and GW scored to cut the deficit to 26-7. Lavine took over again early in the fourth, however, and the 180-pound senior from Pittsburgh spearheaded a 69-yard touchdown march. A 12-yard Lavine pitch to Pete Augsburger provided the touchdown.

Three minutes later, Shemonski electrified the crowd with his 76-yard return of a Johnny Shullenbarger kick. Marylands' blocking on the play was terrific. Modzelewski, Tom McQuade and La Rue flattened three Colonials, who were bearing down on Shemonski inside G. W.'s 30, and Shoo Shoo scampered all the way.

Stanford Upsets USC, 34-13; California Wins Eighth Straight

Trojan Rose Bowl Dreams Smashed

Los Angeles, Nov. 5 (AP).—Stanford's alert Indians blasted the Rose Bowl dreams of the University of Southern California today and kept their own hopes alive with a surprising 34 to 13 triumph before 70,04 astonished onlookers.

A 20-point burst of scoring power in the second quarter blotted the Trojans of USC out of the Rose Bowl picture, leaving Stanford with one lone loss in the Pacific Coast Conference play and a chance to knock off undefeated California.

This was the second Trojan conference setback and the worst in Troy's history in 28 games with the Palo Alton Indians.

Halfback Bobby White, 174 pounds of high explosive, broke loose for the first touchdown—a 76-yard burst that began off the left side of his line and ended as he stiff-armed a Trojan defensive man on the 10 and went on across.

Soon after, the Trojans punted and fullback Bill De Young caught it. Instantly, it seemed, the field began to look like it was sowed with Trojans, all embedded by the vicious Indian blockers. De Young gathered speed and traveled 6 yards to put his team 14 points in front.

Then the Stanfords marched decisively 56 yards, Ken Rose taking a 16-yard pass from Gary Kerkorian for the third touchdown.

Operating under quarterback Jim Powers, USC played hot and cold, mostly cold, until the last half. Then Powers connected on a touchdown pass to end Hal Hatfield. It went for 63 yards, with Hatfield running the last 48 yards of the play. Again, aided by an Indian penalty, USC got close enough for Powers to hit reserve back Bill Bowers for 31 yards and six points.

Dartmouth Scalps Lions By 35 to 14

New York, Nov. 5 (AP).—Dartmouth turned up for next week's clash with unbeaten Cornell by scalping Columbia today, 35-14, after a stuttering start that fanned false hopes among the 25,000 Baker Field customers.

Dartmouth's road to a fifth straight win after an opening loss to Penn appeared rugged in the early stages. Columbia, looking anything but a three-touchdown underdog, drove 66 yards to score on Leon Van Bellingham's smash from the one early in the second period. That was the first score of the game.

With Johnny Clayton mixing passes to Rowe and Bill Roberts the Green went 84 yards in 17 plays following Columbia's rally with the drive ending on a 25-yard Clayton to Rowe touchdown pass. Then Dey, with only 19 seconds of play remaining, ran 62 on a brilliant punt return to send Dartmouth out in front at the half.

Dartmouth, still in the running for the Ivy League crown, sewed it up in the first five minutes of the third quarter with Carey scoring twice. Bob Tyler's 51-yard return of the second half opening kickoff, set up the first score. Two minutes later it was Carey again, intercepting a Tracy aerial and dashing 40 yards for the score.

Bears Claw Wash. State By 33 to 14

Berkeley, Calif., Nov. 5 (AP).—The unbeaten California's Golden Bears reeled off victory No. 8 in their drive to the Rose Bowl today, winning, 33 to 14, over Washington State.

A crowd of 33,000 saw Lynn Waldorf's Bears protect an unblemished record by scoring two touchdowns in the opening and final quarters and another in the third.

California, favored to win by 33 or more points, found itself in a battle that ended with the Cougars in possession six yards from the Bears' goal. It was 13-7 at the half with the unbeaten Cougars definitely in the game.

Quarterback Bob Celeri, California's candidate for All-America honors, threw a 46-yard pass to Right Half Jim Monachino in the first period. He later tossed a 40-yard pass in the fourth quarter to Left End Dan Begovich, the latter stabbing the ball in the end zone.

The Bears intercepted a Washington State pass and put the ball into play on the latter's 18-yard line for another first-period touchdown. Fullback Pete Schabarum ripped off 15 yards to the 3-yard marker and went over on the next play.

Washington Jolts Oregon by 28-27

Portland, Oreg., Nov. 5 (AP).—The University of Washington upset the University of Oregon here today, 28-27, outscoring the Ducks in a wild first half, then holding on for the win.

The unerring toe of Halfback Jim Rosenzweig, Washington's placement expert, proved the difference. He kicked four straight conversions, while Oregon's Chet Daniels, who had 17 straight before today, missed his first try.

Nats Fined $500 By Chandler

Baseball Commissioner A. B. Chandler yesterday found the Washington Nats guilty of violating the high school rule, and he fined them $500.

The violation, admitted last night by Nats President Clark Griffith, occurred in the signing of Infielder Eugene Menard to a professional contract before he had finished high school.

Griffith explained, "Paul Rossiter, one of our scouts, who runs a two-day baseball school in Illinois every year, signed Menard on his father's word that the youngster had graduated."

Cornell Wins in Blizzard, 33 to 7

Syracuse 7th Victim of '49

Ithaca, N. Y., Nov. 5 (AP).—Hillary Chollet and Jeff Fleischmann showed firm footing in a blinding snowstorm before 33,000 today to lead Cornell to a 33-7 victory over Syracuse that kept the Big Red in the list of the Nation's unbeaten, untied powers.

It was the seventh straight triumph for Cornell, which ranks with Army as a titan in the East. The defeat was the fourth in seven starts for Syracuse, the third setback in a row.

Bernie Babula covered 11 yards in adding Cornell's fifth touchdown.

Cornell threw but three passes, Pete Dorset connecting with one for two and Tom Gargan missing one. Bernie Custis completed seven of thirteen heaves for Syracuse. The Ithacans rolled up 11 first downs to eight for Syracuse. The Ithacans gained 297 yards on the ground to Syracuse's 95.

Cornell's hard-charging line stalled the Syracuse ground attack time and again and its attack kept the Orange defense spread wide open.

Harvard Loses To Princeton

By Bill King

Cambridge, Mass., Nov. 5 (AP). Princeton's snarling Tigers, fed lavishly by Fullback Jack Davison, chewed up Harvard, 33-13, in their 42nd football meeting today before 28,000.

Davison climaxed 80 and 70-yard marches with one-yard scoring bucks and then raced 69 and 52 yards for his other touchdowns.

Late in the opening session, Harvard moved from its 30 to Princeton's 20, from where, after the teams changed sides, Fullback Johnny West banged to the 8. Then Chuck Roche contacted Jim Henry in the Princeton end zone. The extra point was missed and the Tigers bounded back and set the stage for Davison's first scoring slam.

Princeton's second touchdown journey included a 40-yard pass from Jake McCandless to Sella and then an 8-yard heave to Bill Kleinsasser in the end zone. Frank Reichel came up with the first of three extra points to give Princeton a 13-6 half-time lead.

Early in the second half Harvard evened matters. Roche went the last 8 yards. Chuck Walsh converted for the 13-13 deadlock.

Roche set up his own scoring chance by completing a long pass to Paul Shafer on Princeton's 10 and then banging for 2 before going the rest of the way.

Brown Downs Yale, 14 to 0

New Haven, Conn., Nov. 5 (AP).—Brown, paced by Leon Beaulieu and Walt Patuszak, sent hapless Yale down to its third straight football defeat today in the bowl before 46,000 fans. The Bruins, tallying in the first and third periods, blanked Yale, 14-0.

Checked and outplayed during the opening period, Brown tallied the first time it penetrated Yale territory. The score, a beautiful 27-yard run by Beaulieu, came on a delayed line buck after Patuszak had fooled the Yales out of position.

Brown's second touchdown was another chunk of nifty running and passing. The clincher was Patuszak's 10-yard toss into the flat which Loren Rodewig nabbed on the 10-yard line from where he trotted the rest of the way. Joe Condon converted after both scores, even though he missed a 29-yard field goal attempt shortly after the Bruins' first score.

Brown held desperate Yale on its 27 and 15-yard lines in the first quarter; on its 32 in the second period; on its 22 in the third session and on its 22 and 1 in the final chapter.

Crusaders Nip Colgate, 35-27

Worcester, Mass., Nov. 5 (U.P.)—Holy Cross broke into the victory column after six defeats today by beating Colgate, 35 to 27, in a bruising offensive game before 8000 rain-soaked homecoming fans at Fitton Field.

Paul Gallo, Holy Cross' highly-regarded sophomore, made the victory certain with a 101-yard run late in the fourth period. Protected by excellent blocking, Gallo picked up a Colgate fumble behind his own goal and scampered the length of the field. An earlier Gallo run of 99 yards was called back and the touchdown nullified by a clipping penalty.

Another long jaunt by Gallo started the scoring on the second play of the game. He gathered in a lateral and then raced through the entire Colgate defense for 57 yards and a score.

Ohio Tops Pitt, 14-10, After Trailing By 10-0

Pittsburgh, Nov. 5 (U.P.) — Ohio State's Buckeyes, a thrill-a-week football team which never gets going until it has to, put over two touchdowns in the third period today, coming from behind to defeat Pittsburgh, 14 to 10, before 54,789 fans.

Trailing 10-0, The Buckeyes scored their first touchdown midway in the third period after Bill Sichko fumbled Fred Morrison's punt on his own 12-yard line. George Toneff recovered and Pandell Savic went over on a quarterback sneak from about the six-inch line.

Bill Newell touched off the second scoring drive when he intercepted Carl DePasqua's pass on the Ohio State 15-yard line and ran it back to the 30. Ray Hamilton swung through the left side for the touchdown from 22 yards out. Jim Hague converted both points.

The Ohio State victory crushed Pitt's hopes for a bowl bid and extended the visitor's victory streak to 10 wins against three losses and a tie in the 20-year-old football series.

Pitt scored first in the second period when Depasqua passed 17 yards to End Earl Sumpter in the end zone. Bolkovac converted and then added a 28-yard field goal in the opening minutes of the third period to give Pitt a 10-0 lead.

The Panthers' attack was hampered by the loss of their breakaway runner, Jommy Joe Robinson, who suffered an injured knee in the Pennsylvania game last Saturday. Despite Robinson's absence, Pitt drove deep into Ohio territory twice in the first period and again in the second when they reached the 24-yard line but lacked the punch to put it over.

Bob Colter scored two touchdowns to pace the Turkey Thicket Tigers to a 12-7 win over the YMCA Eagles in a Boys' YMCA department league game yesterday on the Ellipse. Vance Nessly scored the lone tally for the losers and Bob Drew rushed the extra point.

The Tigers now lead the league with a 6-0 record.

In another league game, also on the Ellipse, Morningside trounced Kensington, 63-0, in a game where no first downs were made by either team.

Alexandria, Merrick Titlists

Two teams clinched championships in their weight divisions of the Washington Boys' Club Football Conference by winning yesterday on the Ellipse.

Merrick won the 90-pound title with a 13-6 victory over Alexandria, and the 105-pound Alexandria team took the crown in its division with a 7-0 win over Georgetown.

Howard Booters Win

Wilkes Barre, Nov. 5.—Fedo Blake scored three goals to pace the Howard University of Washington, D. C., soccer team to a 4-2 win over Wilkes College here today. The other goal for the winners was scored by Neville Clark.

Gophers Rebound, Swamp Iowa, 55-7 around by underdogs today and drubbed Iowa, 55 to 7, before a delighted crowd of 63,517 Big Ten football fans at Memorial Stadium.

Victims of two straight upset defeats in conference play, the Gophers completely throttled Iowa's vaunted passing attack and launched a combination aerial and ground offensive that made a sieve of the Hawkeye defense.

Minnesota scored two touchdowns in the first period and one each in the second and third, then polished off its performance with a four-touchdown fourth quarter that included three tallies in the space of one minute and 29 seconds.

Iowa's passers, who were expected to have a field day against the Gophers' leaky aerial defense, never did get started as they completed only 10 of 31 passes and had six intercepted — most of them at vital points in the game. Iowa got its lone score in the fourth period.

Aside from that, it was all Minnesota. Billy Bye—a demon runner and passer today—started it off by plunging across the Iowa goal line from 4 yards out in the first five minutes and Frank Kuzma bulled over from the 1-foot line five minutes later.

Bye passed 7 yards to Ralph McAllister for a second period score set up by a Minnesota pass interception at Midfield, and kept things moving in the third by scoring from the 3-yard line to cap a 42-yard drive.

Michigan Wins, 20-12, Over Purdue

Ann Arbor, Mich., Nov. 5 (U.P.)—Hot-and-cold Michigan ripped to three first-half touchdowns and then hung on for a 20-to-12 grid triumph over tenacious Purdue before 95,207 fans today.

Again it was dazzling halfback Chuck Orthmann who led the Wolveriness of the eight-point decision they needed to remain in running for their third straight Western Conference title.

Although not as accurate in the air as when he beat Minnesota almost single-handed, the Milwaukee towhead reeled off brilliant runs, one an 80-yard kickoff return.

Orthmann set up Michigan's first score with a 23-yard jaunt to the Boilermaker 10. Hard-smashing fullback Don Dufek then took over, driving to the one-yard marker and diving over on the next play.

A little later, the Boilermakers rolled from their 21, with Quarterback Bob Hartman pitching and Halfback Ken Gorgal catching, to the Wolverine 10. Gorgal punched over.

Ortmann Races 80 Yards

With only 2 minutes left in the half, Michigan held a skimpy one-point lead. But those 2 minutes were fatal to the Indiana team.

Ortmann scampered 80 yards with the kickoff to the Purdue 10 before he stumbled over one of his own blockers. Don Peterson rammed off tackle for the leading touchdown.

A pass interception by back Chuck Lentz set up the final Michigan T.D. He snagged the ball on his own 40 and knifed to the Boilermaker 12. Substitute Quarterback John Putich pitched to Harry Allis in the end zone for the counter.

Illini Win, 33-14, Set Rushing Mark

Champaign, Ill., Nov. 5 (AP).—Illinois' sophomore terrors, led by Johnny Karras, set a modern Western Conference ground-gaining record of 552 yards today in trouncing Indiana, 33-14.

The output, which included 449 yards by rushing and 103 passing, shattered the old mark of 531 set by Michigan against Ohio State in 1943.

In a game of sensational runs, which kept a "Dad's Day" crowd of 40,457 cheering, Illinois won its first home scrap of the season. Karras personally accounted for 155 yards in 12 carries for a 12.9-yard average.

This boosted the rushing total for the former prep quarter-mile champion from Argo, Ill., to 624 yards in five games—only 45 shy of the record punched by Ohio State's Les Horvath in six 1944 contests.

Illinois still faces Ohio State and Northwestern. Karras may yet put the record out of sight.

The Argc express, derailing tacklers right and left, rumbled on runs of 65, 26, 25, 20 and 15 yards today as Illinois scored in every quarter.

Wisconsin Wins, 14-6, Over Wildcats

Evanston, Ill., Nov. 5 (AP).—Wisconsin's brisk, business-like Badgers put on two long drives today to defeat Northwestern, 14-6, before a homecoming crowd of 51,000.

The Badgers' sharp, efficient attack carried them 85 yards in 11 plays for a touchdown in the first period.

They came back for an encore in the final quarter and moved 79 yards in 15 plays to score again.

The old grads in the throng got one big thrill when Art Murakowski, Northwestern's 1948 All-American fullback, caught a punt on his 2-yard line and galloped down the west line for 79 yards and the only Wildcat marker.

Hilleary-to-White Pass Wins, 6-0, For Club No. 10

"Poochy" Hilleary passed 28 yards to Ches White for the only touchdown as Club No. 11 nosed out Club No. 10, 6-0, in the feature game of the 120-pound class of the Metropolitan Police Boys Club Football League yesterday at Fairlawn.

In the same class, Club No. 5 shaded Club No. 4, 12-6, with George Constantino and Ray Humphries scoring touchdowns for the winners. Benny Jarman accounted for the lone losers' tally.

In the 140-pound class, Club No. 10 defeated Club No. 11, 7-6, and Club No. 4 and Club No. 5 fought a scoreless game.

Navy Ties Tulane 21-21

half minutes when Duff Arnold raced wide and bulled his way over from the 6. Cool little Roger Drew called upon his Army-Navy experience last year to gain another 21-21 tie with a perfect placement.

The great hero Price nearly became a stand-in for Navy's goat after taking the following kickoff 22 yards to his 31. On the next play, he went for 9 more yards but fumbled.

Navy Back Bill Weaver recovered on Tulane's 40 and Navy rushed to the 16. With seconds left, Drew was inserted to try a field goal from the 23. However, as his foot came forward to meet the ball, the referee threw a body-block over his leg and the game was over.

It was a well-deserved draw for the fiery Middies and had they been able to contain Price they would have won.

Navy started out completely unawed by its deepest penetration of the South. It penetrated just as deeply into Tulane territory, going on an 88-yard scoring march after taking the opening kickoff.

It had a shaky start when Vic Vine fumbled on his 12 and Tulane's Dick Fugler recovered. Fortunately for Navy, Tulane was off-sides.

Zastrow Passes 31 Yards

There were no more interruptions and Zastrow gave Tulane a preview of things to come when he completed a 31-yard pass to Jimmy Powers.

Vine, a scrawny 5-foot-9 160-pounder who played only intramural football last year as a Plebe, went over from a half yard out.

Navy had another scoring chance immediately. Joe Ernst fumbled on his 27 and Captain Phil Ryan recovered. Zastrow threw a 20-yard pitch to End Ron Andresen and Navy had a first down on the 3.

The Middies couldn't make it. Zastrow missed a chance to walk over when he went through with an incomplete pass to Ryan. The defenders faded to give 210-pound Bob his chance but soph in experience hurt.

Price, a New Orleans boy touted for national honors at the beginning of the season, got Tulane out of that hole. From his 9, he raced 52 yards to Navy's 39. Then he rushed from the 23 to the 1.

Navy fought but, on fourth down, Price got over momentarily. He was hurled back and six points were registered over the Middies' strenuous objections.

Instead of Navy leading 14-0, it was a tie ball game.

Zastro pitched Navy to its second touchdown, anyway. Just 20 seconds before the first half ended, he threw a long pass that Tulane Center George Maddox tapped into the arms of End Larry Treadwell. Treadwell galloped to the Tulane 10 on the 41-yard play.

Then Zastrow threw a 5-yard strike to Vic Vine.

Navy's Paul Tetreault, 225-pound tackle, played an inspired game to lead a fighting Navy line that repulsed Tulane's heavier forward throughout the third period.

Tulane Back Ejected

But late in the period, a curious twist split open the game. Back Bill Svoboda, one of Tulane's three cocaptains today, was ejected from the game and Tulane penalized to its 33 for his personal foul.

That was the signal for flashy 190-pound Price to go. And go he did on a 67-yard journey. Price was so fast on that one that two Navy defenders sopped chasing him on the 10.

In little more than two minutes, he had another six-pointer. Dave Jones got off a poor punt to his 31 and Bobby Jones smashed for 6. Then Mr. Price turned in another 25-yard prize-winner.

The Green Wave, at this moment, was threatening to engulf the poor Middies, but Navy wasn't done, not with Pitcher Zastrow on deck.

Even before they tied it, Navy made a scoring gesture that had the partisan crowd panicky. End Bill Wilson made a pretty catch of a long one by Zastrow and on a 44-yard gain went to Tulane's 27. A screen pass to plucky Vine made it a first on the Tulane 16. Tulane held off the Navy that time when its pass defense stiffened but it didn't have the answer to the final Zastrow-led threat.

On his busy but successful day, the Wisconsin soph threw 32 passes and completed 13 for 229 yards. Oddly, the figure almost matches exactly the 238 yards Price raced for in 22 tries from scrimmage.

The tie snapped Navy's three-game losing streak and marked the first time this year the Middies didn't lose on the road.

It put a pretty little dent in Tulane's 5-1 record that only had been blemished by Notre Dame.

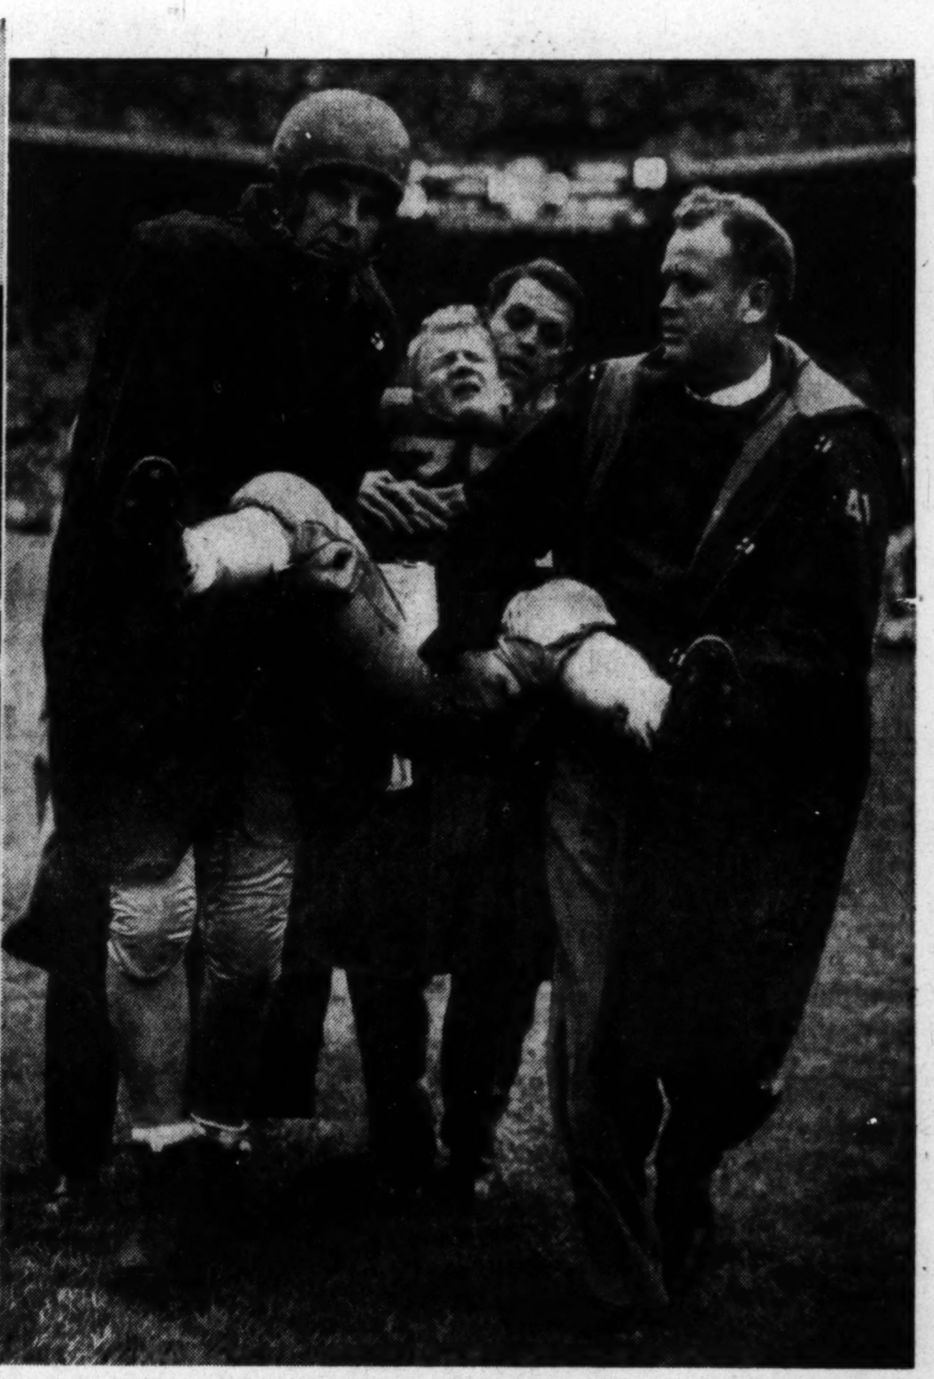
CAVALIER EUGENE SCHROEDER RUSHES QUAKER FRANCIS BAGNELL, PASS IS INCOMPLETE

photos by Charles DelVecchio —The Washington Post



RICHARD (WHITEY) MICHELS, VIRGINIA'S STAR OF YESTERDAY'S GAME WITH PENN, IS CARRIED OFF AFTER BEING HURT IN SECOND QUARTER.

gained only 54 yards in 17 tries. Michels completed 9 out of 12 passes for 123 yards.

His favorite receiver was Osisek, who hauled in seven Michels pitches for 100 yards, including one for 16 yards and a touchdown.

To further discombooberate the thoroughly bewildered Quakers, Osisek essayed two passes himself, clicked on both, one of which went for a touchdown.

Penn, which lost litle face by its last second 22-21 loss to Pittsburg last week, was never in the ball game. The Quakers fumbled on their first play from scrimmage, the Cavaliers recovered and went for a touchdown, and after that it was Virginia all the way.

In no disrespect to Michaels' passing, the Penn pass defense was horrible. In the second quarter the Quakers allowed Osisek, whom Michels had sent in motion to the right, to go unattended, and Michels hit him with a 16-yard touchdown pass that settled the issue to all intents and purposes right then and there.

Drven by Red Bagnell, a superlative tailback today, Penn threatened twice in the third quarter, driving to the one and 25-yard lines, but each time the Cavaliers met the charge and repulsed the Quakers.

Michels Fools Penn

In the last two minutes of play, the Quakers, led by Bagnell's passing, went over for their second touchdown against a team of Virginia rinkydinks which Guepe had inserted into the fray to permit his entire squad to share in Virginia's stunning upset success.

Virginia got its first break soon after End Carlton Elliott of Laurel, Del., had kicked off. Wingback Billy Rhoads fumbled the snap from center and Elliott recovered on Penn's 33-yard line.

With the Quakers massed in a seven-man line ready to repel an expected Papit thrust, Michels made 'em look silly by passing perfectly to Osisek in the flat for 31 yards. He was knocked out of bounds by Bagnell, but two plays later Ralph Shoaf went over guard from one yard out for the score.

Kudos are also in order for young Shoaf who along with Gene Schroeder of Anacostia, defended sensationally against Quaker passes. The Quakers tried 35 and completed only 12, most of them in the last three minutes of action against the Cavalier subs.

Shoaf Handicapped

It was a particularly trying day for Shoaf. The 22-year-old Roanoke, Va., halfback suffered severe lime burns on both hands and his neck last Saturday against West Virginia at Charlottesville. Most of the skin was gone from his left hand, his body was festered. He was in the university hospital from Monday through Thursday, but today he was too hale and hearty for ths Quakers.

Five minutes after the first jolt, spectators experienced a second with Michels and Osisek again furnishing the fireworks. This drive started on the Cavalier 21. Michels, who completed his first six passes, flipped two, one to Osisek and the other to Ed Bessell to advance to the Penn 38.

At this juncture, Michels pitched out to Osisek, who faded back and tossed a perfect shot to Anacostia's Gene Schroeder for a 33-yard advance. From the five-yard line, Papit scored on the first try, his ninth TD of the year. Elliott, who missed two of his extra point tries, kicked this one to climax the 79-yard push and it was Virginia 13, Penn 0 with the game less than nine minutes old.

Center Rufe Barkley, of Greenville, S. C., suh, set in motion Virginia's third touchdown, scored midway in the second period, by intercepting a Ray Dooney pass at midfield.

In five plays Virginia scored and it was a beaut—Michels to Osisek. Papit, ripped off two smashes to carry to the Penn 16. At that point, Osisek went into motion to his right.

The Quakers left him unguarded and Michels caught him with a pass to the goal line to make it 19-0.

A bit later the Quakers recovered Osisek's fumble of a punt on the Cavalier 13-yard line and Fullback Bob Deuber went over from the 2-yard line for Penn's first score. Johnny Agocs, who converted each time, came through with the extra point.

After Bob Topchick had intercepted a Michels pass on the Quaker 2 in the third quarter, Penn drove 97 yards, yet failed to score as the Cavalier line stopped Bagnell on the 1-yard line.

Early in the fourth period, the Cavaliers repulsed a Penn drive on their 19 and this time the Virginians went 81 yards for a touchdown. The drive was capped when Osisek, passing from the Penn 34, hit Shoaf on the 8, but Bagnell batted the ball out of Shoaf's hands. Out of nowhere came Bessell to haul in the ball before it hit the ground and zoom across for Virginia's fourth and last touchdown.

Bagnell, completing eight passes, took the Quakers 65 yards in the last two minutes for their second score, tossing a 4-yarder on fourth down to Warren Horton for the consolation tally.

Little Hoyas Lose, 26-0, to St. John's High

By Hal Gordon

St. John's exploded for 19 points in the first period last night at the G. W. Stadium in Alexandria and went on to rout Georgetown Prep, 26-0, in the first game of the Catholic League series.

A Bobby McLindon pass to Joe Hands was good for 14 yards and the first score in the first two minutes of play. The Cadets had recovered Neil Kennedy's fumble on the Little Hoyas 20 to set up the first score.

Tommy Clark smashed 31 yards over right guard to climax a 43-yard drive for St. John's second score. Prep's Jimmy Sullivan fumbled the following kickoff and the Cadets recovered on the six. Tom Collins skirted his right end for the tally three plays later.

Collins intercepted a Neil Kennedy pass midway in the fourth quarter and returned it 56 yards for the final Cadet touchdown.

L.S.U. Thumps Vanderbilt by 33 to 13 Score

Baton Rouge, La., Nov. 5 (AP).—Louisiana State outcharged and outplayed Vanderbilt here tonight to win a hard fought Southeastern Conference victory, 33-13.

Thirty-four thousand fans were alternately thrilled by long gains and chilled by costly miscues. Vandy was unable to put together a ground game, but struck tellingly through the air, with Quarterback Jamie Wade consistently hitting Ends Bucky and Bud Curtis.

Louisiana State's rushing was stronger, but the Bengals, too, did better with passes. The Tigers scored in every period, four times on passes and once on a nine-yard run set up by two neat tosses. Halfback Billy Hedges, who carried most for the Bengals, hit for two touchdowns. Backs Jimmy Roshto, Billy Baggett and Carroll Griffith and End Sam Lyle made the others.

Vandy's touches came in the second quarter. The Wade-Bucky Curtis combination was good for both, on a one-yard pass and again on one that traveled 24 yards. Griffith kicked LSU's extra point, while Cannon Mayes made Vandy's. Fumbles were frequent and LSU turned three of Vandy's into touchdowns. Lightnin' Lee Nalley, the Commodores' ace punt returner, bobbled several LSU kicks, but managed to get away once for a 53-yard dash that nearly hit pay dirt.

Georgia Upset By Fla., 28-7

Jacksonville, Fla., Nov. 5 (AP).—Chuck Hunsinger dashed and smashed Florida to a 28-7 upset victory over Georgia.

Hunsinger, All-Southern Conference back of 1948, just about clinched a repeat with the kind of running that can be described best by results. He ran 18 times for 174 yards—an average of almost 10 yards—and scored three touchdowns.

Florida needed only 11 plays from scrimmage to score three touchdowns in the first half. The first went 58 yards on a 87-yard pass play, Angus Williams to Don Brown, and Hunsinger's first scoring run for 21 yards.

Loren Broadus set up the other first half scores with a punt runback and an interception of a pass by Georgia's Ray Prosperi. Williams sneaked over on the sixth play of a 23-yard push and Hunsinger smashed across to end a 28-yard drive.

For the only touchdown of the second half, Florida moved 83 yards in seven plays. Hunsinger covered 66 yards of the distance and bulled over from an inch out.

Georgia's lone touchdown tied the game for a short while at 7-7. The 54-yard march took 13 plays and ended with a six-yard toss, Prosperi to Bob Walston.

Ga. Tech Raps Tennessee, 30 to 13

Three Touchdowns Scored After Fumble by Vols

Knoxville, Tenn., Nov. 5 (AP).—Hopped-up Georgia Tech unloosed an amazing display of power and razzle-dazzle today to sting Tennessee, 30 to 13, before 48,000 fans.

With Sophomore Darrell Crawford of Kingsport, Tenn., playing in place of injured Quarterback Jimmy Southard, the Yellow Jackets smothered Tennessee with a thunderous offensive that rolled for 405 yards and 23 first downs.

Tech broke into the scoring column first with a 19-yard field goal by Bobby North after a 41-yard march.

Crawford sneaked over from the 1-yard line for Tech's first touchdown in the second period after a 55-yard drive. In the third stanza, Guard Buck Doyal grabbed Hal Littleford's bobble on Tennessee's 46. Tech drove to the 1 and North dived over.

Early in the final period, Lauricella dropped the ball and again Tech grabbed it, this time Dick Harvin pouncing on the oval. The Jackets drove to the 1-foot line. North again smashed over.

Tech's fourth touchdown came when Tennessee got off a short kick from its 20 after the Jackets were awarded a safety on a pass intentionally grounded by Hank Lauricella. This last scoring march covered 38 yards, with Morris Harrison plunging over from the 2.

Both Tennessee touchdowns were bulled over by Gordon Polofosky, 200-pound sophomore fullback.

The Bullets came back in the final quarter to score 37 points, but the shooting of George Mikan and Jim Pollard, who collected 46 points between them, kept Baltimore at bay throughout.

VMI Wallops Davidson, 47-6

Lexington, Va., Nov. 5 (AP). —Striking by land and through the air, Virginia Military Institute scored in every quarter here today before a Homecoming Day crowd.

The Keydets tallied three touchdowns in the first period, two in the second, and one each in the final stanzas, while Davidson's lone score came in the third when their star receiver, Mott Price, caught Cliff Turner's pass in the end zone.

Quantico Routs Patuxent By 68 to 0

Quantico, Va., Nov. 5.—The Quantico Marines earned the title of the top Navy team of this area here today as they swamped the Sailors of Patuxent, 68-0, and earned the right to represent this area in the first of the all-Navy playoffs.

In the opening minutes of the game he raced over from the Sailor 36 after a march downfield that started on the Marine 36. Just minutes later he again crossed the line, this time on a plunge from the 3.

His final score in the period came on a pass from Tom Long that was good for 70 yards.

In the second period, Kenny Bott drew scoring honors when he climaxed a 60-yard Marine march downfiield, going over from the 15. Bott scored again in the same period when he traveled from the midstripe.

St. Anthony's Wins; Nears CYO Crown

By Jules Loh

St. Anthony's and Blessed Sacrament moved nearer a meeting in Griffith Stadium November 27 for the CYO championship after 13-0 and 7-6 wins over St. Joseph's Home and St. Michael's yesterday on the Ellipse.

By winning yesterday Blessed Sacrament took over first place in Section I and St. Anthony's in Section II. One more game remains on both schools' schedules with yesterday's winners highly favored.

Next Saturday Blessed Sacrament will face Our Lady of Lourdes for the Section I crown and St. Anthony's plays Sacred Heart for the Section II title.

Although by virtue of their shutout victory St. Anthony's remains unscored on, unbeaten and untied for the past two years, the Blessed Sacrament-St. Michael's game was the real thriller.

Fullback Jimmy Hayden, perhaps the best high school prospect in the District, contributed Blessed Sacrament's all important conversion with a plunge over center after Jack McCaleb ran back a punt 60 yards for the first period TD.

Captain Johnny Hart, the kid who piloted the team to four previous victories, was sidelined with a knee injury for St. Joe's game of the year.

AT PIMLICO

Dear Folks:

A checkup of the mutuel department seems to discredit rumors that a big betting coup was made on Rough Ordy, the horse found to have been stimulated. A total of $1561 was wagered on the $45 shot but more than two-thirds was in $2 tickets. William Owen, steeplechase rider ruled off the Nation's tracks for his alleged participation in a "fixed" jumping race several years ago, will seek partial reinstatement before the Maryland Racing Commission on Tuesday. Owen is not seeking to ride but wants permission to work in the stable area. He says he has tried but can't make a living away from the tracks. Citation is back in training here and probably will be heard from with a bang during winter racing. BILL.

Lot o' Luck, Striking Run 2d and 3d

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

Pimlico, Md., Nov. 5—Oil Capitol ran like greased lightning through the stretch today and won the twenty-seventh edition of the $25,000-added Pimlico Futurity.

Performing in the colors of Thomas Gray of Dallas, Tex., the colt won by seven lengths from his running mate, Hasly House Farm's Lot o' Luck. Both are trained by Harry Trotsek.

Third position in the field of 11 went to Ogden Phipps' Striking, the lone filly.

Rye Over Mint Julep

On a blustery day, giving thought to Maryland rye rather than mint julep, the Futurity went Kentucky in a big way. Oil Capitol, as well as Lot o' Luck, were shipped here early in the week after successful campaigning in the Blue Grass State. The riders, Earl J. Knapp and Robert L. Baird, also were imported from Derbyville for the test.

The entry was the favorite by 10 cents over Striking and paid $6.60 to win, $5.80 to place and $3.60 to show while Striking returned $3 to show.

Oil Capitol, in winning his fourth race in a row, was clocked in 1:44 1/5 for the mile and a sixteenth over a fast track. The time was the fastest for the Futurity since Count Fleet's 1:43 3-5 in the 1942 renewal.

Striking, second to Bed o' Roses in both the Selima Stakes and the Marguerite, did the expected and went to the front directly after the break. Oil Capitol was snugged along in good position as the field went into the backstretch.

Jockey Bobby Bernhardt saved ground as he kept striking in front with Suleiman, Just Eight and Oil Capitol following in the order named. At the far turn, Just Eight dropped out of contention, but Suleiman and Oil Capitol began to close in on the leader while Lot o' Luck showed signs of life in the rear of the field.

On the swing into the stretch, Knapp turned on the oil. The son of Mahmoud disposed of Striking in abrupt fashion, immediately opening a daylight lead that was to widen from that point to the finish. Striking continued to drive, but could not stave off the closing rush of Lot o' Luck.

The victory was the sixth of the year for the gallant 2-year-old in 13 outings.

Oil Capitol upped his earnings by $48,755 in the race which had a gross value of $58,875, outstripping all Maryland fall events. The colt now has $106,956 to his credit.

Nittany Lions Triumph, 34-14

Morgantown, W. Va., Nov. 5 (AP).—Penn State's Fran Rogel forgot his injuries today to lead the Nittany Lions to an easy 34-14 decision over West Virginia in the Mountaineers' homecoming game.

The Mountaineers found no way to stop the slippery 200-pound fullback as he eased through the line time after time for nice pieces of ground.

Rogel, a senior, suffered an ankle injury in the Nebraska game and had missed all but a single play in three games since then.

A homecoming crowd of 20,000 watched the Lions take early command with two touchdowns and keep to the fire all the way. Snow began to fall minutes after the game ended.

Penn State, after making two touchdowns in the first quarter, added two more in the third and wound up with another in the fourth with its second stringers on duty.

The Mountaineers scored in the second and fourth periods, once on a Walthall pass and again after a pass had brought the ball to the 3-yard line.

By West McLean

A crowd of 2500 saw the Mason-Dixon Conference game, Catholic's first win against four defeats and Gallaudet's fourth straight loss.

Tuttle completed three straight passes—the first for 12 yards to Dick Amundsen, the second to Truitt Sanders for 9 and the last to Dave Halberg for 11 and the score.

Gallaudet scored again on the final play of the game with Tuttle passing to Amundsen for five yards and Amundsen racing 55 yards down the sidelines to pay dirt. Amundsen added the extra point on a rush.

The Cardinals' first score came on the end of a 63-yard march with Bucky Ennis crashing over right tackle 7 yards for the score. Ennis scored again in the first quarter on a 4-yard plunge.

Catholic scored late in the second period as Joe Dunn hit Russ Johnson all alone in the end zone for the score. Climaxing a 34-yard march.

The Cards failed to score in the third period, but got another T. D. midway in the last period as Dunn went over right guard, climaxing a 70-yard march.

Missouri Triumphs, 20-13; Kansas Gains 27-13 Victory

Late Air Attack Beats Colorado

Boulder, Colo., Nov. 5 (AP).—Missouri's ground attack sputtered today but in the last minute the Tigers threw a scoring punch through the airlanes to defeat Colorado 20 to 13 in one of their toughest games of the season.

Phil Klein's 28-yard touchdown pass to John Glorioso gave Missouri its decision after a terrific battle highlighted by bruising play of the Colorado line.

After a bruising first quarter, Missouri struck sharply. Five passes carried the Tigers 69 yards to the initial touchdown, with Dick Armstrong finally going over.

Then Sam Catanzaro gave Colorado an opportunity by recovering a fumble on the Missouri 28. The Buffs moved to the 9, where John Strobel passed to Joe Mix for a touchdown. Ed Pudlik converted to tie the score.

Fred Hulse returned the second-half kickoff 30 yards to the Missouri 46; Klein completed two passes to Ackermann, and the Tigers had a first down on the Colorado 2. From there it took three plays to score, with Klein sneaking across.

Nebraska Bows In Rough Battle

Lincoln, Nebr., Nov. 5 (AP).—Great defensive line play and opportunism on the attack won a 27 to 13 football victory for Kansas over Nebraska today.

The scoring started in the first period as Nebraska got out in front on a 27-yard Fran Nagle-Ralph Damkroger touchdown pass.

It was tied up in the second period as the Kansas End Orbin Tice blocked a Nebraska punt from the Kansas 31 and End Charles O'Neal gobbled up the ball on the Nebraska 35 to go on for a touchdown.

St. Albans Wins Handily, 27-0

Walt Leach scored two touchdowns on runs of 38 and six yards and tallied two extra points on passes to account for 14 points and pace his St. Albans team to a 27-0 win over St. Andrews of Middletown, Del., in an Interstate Academic Conference game yesterday at St. Albans.

The other two touchdowns were scored by Roger Kingsbury, on a 72-yard pass play with Voris Conrad pitching, and Harrison Somerville on a five-yard jaunt around end.

Longwood Beaten by G. U. Frosh

Despite the efforts of Jimmy Pantos, who enrolled in Longwood Prep recently after leaving Central High, the Georgetown Freshmen pushed over the Prepmen 14-0 yesterday at the Georgetown Medical field.

Halfbacks Art Gulla and Jerry O'Mahoney shared the scoring honors for the freshmen with one touchdown apiece. Gulla scored in the first quarter on a line buck from the Longwood 3, ending a 36-yard drive which saw Gino Paglucia gaining most of the ground.

Longwood was in a position to tie the score in the second period as Pantos uncorked a 30-yard pass to Harrington Scott who raced 22 yards to the Freshmen 5. But the Freshmen line held, ending Longwood's chance

O'Mahoney scored in the third period when the Freshmen took over on the Longwood 25. Paglucia moved down to the 4 where O'Mahoney swept wide around right end for the score.

Texas Topples Baylor From the Undefeated Class, 20 to 0

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

60,000 See Campbell Lead Upset

Austin, Texas, Nov. 5 (AP).—The Texas Longhorns toppled Baylor's Bears from the unbeaten list with a solid 20-0 victory as 60,000 looked on today.

Snapping back from three heartbreaking losses in the past four weeks, Texas dealt a smashing blow to Baylor's hopes for its first Southwest Conference title since 1924.

It also probably knocked Baylor out of the top 10 teams of the country. The Bears were rated sixth as they went into today's game.

Fierce rushing by the Texas line and sharp pass-defensive patterns put a damper on the heretofore brilliant aerial attack directed by Baylor's Adrian Burk.

Texas hit its victory stride late in the second quarter.

Big Ray Borneman, a bruising fullback who has been hampered by a knee injury all season, showed his form of last year as he piled over from the 1-foot line. His plunge capped a methodical 18-play drive of 80 yards in which Borneman and Randall Clay were almost the whole show.

Paul Campbell, mixing in frequent passes with the Texas potent ground game, uncorked a 23-yard touchdown pass to End Ben Proctor in the last quarter. The lanky wingman grabbed the ball on the 8 and went over standing up. Clay kicked the first of two successful conversions.

A fumble by Burk set up Texas' final tally. Tackle Bill Wilson recovered on the Baylor 13. A penalty put the ball on the 1-yard line, and Campbell scored the first touchdown of his intercollegiate career on a quarterback sneak.

Rice Wins, 14-0, Takes Southwest Conference Lead

Houston, Tex., Nov. 5 (AP).—Rice's Owls fumbled and sputtered today, but settled down for two long drives and a 14-to-0 victory over Arkansas.

Combined with Texas' defeat of Baylor, the victory gave Rice undisputed possession of first place in the Southwest Conference standings.

End James (Froggie) Williams took first and fourth period touchdown passes from quarterbacks Tobin Rote and Vernon Glass and then kicked both extra poins to account for all the scoring.

Boston U. Scores, 28-7 For 6th Win

Boston, Mass., Nov. 5 (AP). Equaling their best previous winning record, Boston University's untied and undefeated Terriers today won their sixth football victory of the season by downing Temple University 28-7.

Only twice before, in 1921 and in 1948, has BU won six games in a season.

Although he tossed his 15th touchdown of the season for BU's opening touchdown, Sophomore Harry Agganis had one of his poorer passing days. The poised left-handed quarterback completed four of 15 aerials for 27 yards and had two interceptions.

His season's record now shows 41 completed in 82 forwards for 601 yards, and a total of four interceptions.

Bob Whelan scored the Terriers' opening six pointer on a short pass from Agganis in the first period, and added another in the third quarter by crashing through right guard and racing some 23 yards.

After that tally, Temple scored its lone touchdown as Bill Bernardo carried a kickoff 90 yards into the end zone without being touched by a BU player.

Chuck Kent scored BU's second and fourth touchdowns. His first came when he bulled over from the 4, ending a 33-yard advance. Kent's second score came in the final period, the final play in a 63-yard haul. He ran 13 yards for the six points.

Howard Trips Hampton on Pass Play, 7-0

Howard University upset a heavily favored Hampton Institute, 7-0, yesterday before 7000 homecoming fans at Howard.

The Howard touchdown came in the second period when Ernie Davis passed 15 yards to Hillary Thompson and Thompson went another 15 yards for the score. Thompson also added the extra point.

The win gave the Bisons their fourth victory of the season and kept them in the first division of the CIAA Conference race.

A punting duel between Hampton's Jim Dillard and Chris Roberson highlighted second half play. Then Howard drove to the Hampton 3 late in the fourth quarter but lost control on a pass interception. Howard rolled up 16 first downs and 218 yards along the ground while holding Hampton to only 89 yards rushing.

Army Shatters Fordham In 'Brawl Game,' 35 to 0

Stephenson bumped it over in two plays.

Army set the game's rough style in the opening minutes when Galloway racked up Fordham halfback Stan Bloomer with a two-hand lunge to the face that drew a 15-yard penalty. From that point both teams went into a berserk slugging fury.

So consistent was the roughing that the contest smacked of the prize ring, though lacking a knockdown timekeeper. Twice penalties were nullified because both teams were guilty of illegal use of hands, the polite term for slugging, from the same play.

Eleven tihes Fordham was penalized for roughness. Army drew nine penalties on the same count. The referee stepped off a total of 147 yards against the Cadets for various infractionss, 131 against the Rams.

The infighting attained its peak fury in the final two minutes of the first half, when some kind of a record was set by five consecutive penalties from the time that the Army lined up to kick the extra point after its second touchdown, until Mackmull actually kicked it.

Five Kicking Attempts

After Fordham was penalized for offside on Mackmull's first attempt, Army nullified his good kick by being guilty of holding. From the 23-yard line, Mackmull tried again and made the kick, but on this occasion, it was voided by Army roughness. Kicking now from the 39-yard line, Mackmull missed but was reprieved by a Fordham slugging penalty. He missed again from the 27-yard line but got another reprieve by illegal use of hands on the part of the Rams. Finally he made the kick on his fifth attempt from the Ram's 19.

The Rams could not penetrate Army territory in the first half, but they were still parties to a possible upset by holding the Cadets scoreless in the first quarter. Army muffed its big scoring chance of the first period when, with Dick Doheny trapped on a passing attempt, Lohlein ripped the ball from his hand and Kaseman of Army fell on Doheny's fumble on the Rams' 20. From the Fordham four-yard line, Stephenson bulled to the one, only to fumble. Dolan recovered for Fordham.

Army got it's first touchdown on a 75-yard drive late in the second quarter, with Cain shaking loose for 21 yards, and Kellum making a falling catch of a Galiffa pass on the Fordham nine. On fourth down Foldberg detached himself from the Fordham secondary, took a pass on the two-yard line, and sauntered to the touchdown.

In the next four minutes, Army racked up two more scores to assume a 21-0 lead at halftime. The Rams attempted a trick pass, Bloomer taking a pitch-out from Doheny and aiming a pass at Pfeifer. Schultz intercepted it and raced to the Fordham 44.

From the Rams' 31, after missing with two passes, Galiffa aimed a fourth-down pitch at Cain who gave Dimarco the slip at left end, and took the ball on the Fordham five in a clear field. It was touchdown.

Thirty seconds before the half ended Army got the ball again when the Rams were forced to punt. Galiffa aimed a long pitch at Cain, who took the ball in his solitude on the Fordham 15 and laughed his way to a touchdown. The play covered 60 yards.

Those two scores, achieved over an elapsed time of only 90 seconds, took the fire out of Fordham and eliminated the possibility of any upset.

The Rams made 10 first downs, but had no backfield speed with which to turn the Army ends. And they could complete only eight of 19 passes, with Doheny being consistently harried by the onrushing Army ends.

They staged a 55-yard march in the third quarter, Bloomer running 18 on a flanker pass from Doheney, and Higgins slamming at the line, but the drive ended on the Army 18, the Cadets batting down Doheney's desperate passes.

Desperation was the keynote of the Rams' performance in the fourth quarter, and it set up Army's last touchdown. Doheney, trapped on a pass, fumbled, recovered and attempted to lateral the ball. It rolled free, Army recovering on the Fordham 22. On fourth down Galiffa rifled a touchdown pass to the ever-present Cain who took it on the goal line.

Higgins Comes Through

Only a superb piece of defensive play by Larry Higgins saved Fordham from an even worse defeat in the final period. On a Fordham pass by sub quarterback White, Bobby Vinson pulled the ball out of the air deep in Army territory and was headed for a touchdown with a blocker in front of him at midfield, Higgins disposed of the blocker and hauled down Vinson with a touchdown-saving tackle.

Fordham's closest scoring threat developed just before the final whistle when Tom Flanagan grabbed a punt by Bobby Blaik and raced 59 yards to the Army 33. A screen pass moved the ball to Army's 17, but the Rams surrendered the ball two yards later.

Oklahoma Wins Easily

Manhattan, Kans., Nov. 5 (AP).—Oklahoma's mighty and versatile Sooners toyed with undermanned Kansas State today in rolling up a 39-to-0 Big Seven Conference victory.

It was Oklahoma's fourth league victory this season and its seventeenth win in a row.

Playing in clear, crisp weather, the Sooners let their great Halfback George Thomas run his scoring total for the season to 87 points with two touchdowns in the first half.

Halfback Lindell Pearson went 49 yards for the first score midway of the opening quarter. Thomas took a 26-yard pass from Darrell Royal for the second near the period's end.

The Sooners set Thomas over from the 9, Dick Heatly from the 1 and Jack Lockett on a pass from Claude Arnold for touchdowns in the second quarter.

Oklahoma mangaed only one touchdown in the second half. That came in the fading seconds of the third quarter on a 35-yard pass from Claude Arnold to Heatly in the end zone.

Oklahoma Aggies Tied by Tulsa

Stillwater, Okla., Nov. 5 (AP).—Tulsa and Oklahoma A. and M. played a 13-13 tie today in a Missouri Valley Conference football game before 15,500 persons.

All four touchdowns were scored through the air.

Pete Annex pitched both touchdown passes for Tulsa while Jack Hartman tossed both Aggie passes that went for scores.

Smith Sparks Upset Battle

College Station, Tex., Nov. 5 (AP). Texas A. & M. rose from the depths of defeat today to tie mighty Southern Methodist University, 27-27.

It was a pounding fullback, Bob Smith, and a spirit that burned as bright as the sun overhead that smashed the Mustangs' Southwest Conference title hopes and national ranking.

Smith scored three touchdowns to bring the Aggies from behind, then left the final glory to little Billy Tidwell and Bob Shaeffer. Tidwell scored the last Aggie touchdown late in the first quarter and Shaeffer kicked the extra point that gave A. & M. a moral victory in the biggest upset of the Southwest Conference season.

A. & M.'s tie came after five straight lickings and six defeats in its first seven games this year. In 22 games it has won only one and tied three.

All-America Doak Walker and his touchdown twin, Kyle Rote, set a blistering early pace for Southern Methodist — one that seemed to make the three-touchdown edge SMU had been accorded seem small.

Walker scored two touchdowns and passed to Rote for another to give the Mustangs a 20-6 lead at the half.

Things happened in rapid-fire succession in the second half, with Smith smashing over for two touchdowns that tied the score. They kept on happening after Rote had returned a kickoff 100 yards for a touchdown that put the Mustangs ahead as the third quarter ended.

Kentucky Tops Xavier, 21-7

Cincinnati, Ohio, Nov. 5 (U.P.).—Kentucky's Wildcats overpowered and outclassed previously unbeaten, untied Xavier, 21-7, today behind their line-smashing Fullbacks Bill Leskover and Bill Boller.

Kentucky scored in the first period when it took over on the Xavier 36, went to the 1-foot line on three line plays and a pass ruled good because of interference, then Boller drove over.

Kentucky began a 59-yard march that ended in a touchdown two plays after the start of the final period. Bill Leskover carried it over in a 5-yard slice through right guard. Minutes later Leskover scored the final Kentucky touchdown on a 32-yard run wide around end.

Xavier scored in the waning minutes when End Jack Hoffman hauled down a 36-yard heave from Halfback Cliff Wilke on the Kentuck 23. Another Wilke to Hoffman pass carried to the 7 and a penalty put it on the 1. From there Wilke cut over left guard to score.

Bob Williams Stars As Irish Win, 34-21

football afternoon, ran 40 yards to one touchdown and passed to two others as the Irish hammered another crisp triumph into their bid for an unsullied season.

The rough, tough Spartans played to the hilt, but the Irish had a brilliant all-around attack which could not be denied.

Michigan State was an inspired team. But after playing a scoreless first quarter and failing to tally from the 1, the Spartans just couldn't cope with the knifing sharpness of the Irish attack.

It was the first defeat for the Spartans since they bowed, 7-3, to Michigan in their first game of the season. Since then they had won five straight games, beating Marquette, Maryland, William and Mary, Penn State and Temple.

Touchdown Pass to Zalejski

Williams was a bold quarterback for Notre Dame today from start to finish. His 19-yard touchdown shot to Ernie Zalejski for a touchdown in the second period gave the Irish a 7-0 lead and sounded the tempo for the atack.

Michigan State rallied to tie the score at 7-7 when Sonny Grandelius plunged 1 foot for a touchdown in the second period, but that only served to goad the Irish on to their telling clean-up.

Notre Dame, which still has North Carolina, Iowa, Southern California and Southern Methodist to face, simply ground down the Michigan State defense with a brilliantly varied attack.

Still in the second quarter, the Irish marched 95 yards in 17 plays with Larry Coutre plunging over from the two-foot line. Steve Oracko booted his second conversion and Notre Dame led 14-7 at the intermission.

Williams Runs 40 Yards

The ball game really was sewed up in the third quarter when Williams, who had been baiting the Spartans with decoy plunges through the middle, suddenly kept the ball himself instead of handing it off, and scooted 40 yards to pay dirt.

The fourth period produced two touchdowns by each team, but it was Notre Dame which got its pair first to settle the issue.

Stubby Emil Sitko, who led the Irish ball carriers with 88 yards in 18 tries, scurried 12 yards for a touchdown that capped a 59-yard Notre Dame march in nine plays. That put the Irish in front 27-7 at the outset of the final quarter.

Another Notre Dame strike over 63 yards climaxed by a 12-yard touchdown pass from Williams to end Leon Hart gave Notre Dame a 34-7 lead and that put the game on ice.

Michigan State went to its aerial attack and pumped across two more touchdowns, with quarterback Gene Glick flipping scoring shots to ends Bob Carey and Dorne Dibble from six and seven yards out, respectively, with time running out.

POVICH—From P. C-1

The Great Agganis . . . Front and Center

since. In their first five games of the season, the Terriers averaged 40 points. Agganis lacked one touchdown of averaging three completed passes per game.

After yesterday's game, the fellow had 15 touchdown heaves to his credit, with two games in which to tie the record of 22 established last year by Stan Heath of Nevada.

Against West Virginia in the Terriers' third game of the season, Agganis had Coach Dud DeGroot's Mountaineers completely panicked. He threw 13 passes, completed 9 in that 52-20 victory. The four that fell incomplete were dropped by his receivers.

And do you know something? Agganis would rather run the ball than throw it. He's not pass-crazy. In fact, against Syracuse when it was a close game for a half, Coach Donelli called him out of the game to demand "when are you gonna start throwing?" Agganis was positively paternal toward Donelli. "Let me worry about that, coach," he grinned. "You and I are going to do all right before the day is over."

Lest it might be inferred that Agganis is big-shot, he isn't. Donelli is the first to defend him against that charge. "He's the most unselfish kid I ever coached—and the coldest out there on that football field. I've had to call more plays for my quarterbacks in the pro league than I call for Agganis. The kid thinks too well for himself."

To most of the big-time college football coaches who read now about Agganis' feats, they are not quite astounding. They knew about Agganis in his high school days, at least 66 of them did. That's the number of offers of scholarship that descended on Agganis after his graduation from Lynn Classical High School in suburban Boston. Among the disappointed schools that didn't land Agganis was Notre Dame, from which Frank Leahy sent an emissary to Lynn.

As a schoolboy, Annanis was a hot article. He was the quarterback of the Lynn Classical High team that, after winning 11 straight games, was invited to play Granby High of Norfolk, Va., in the Orange Bowl at Miami on Christmas night, 1946. In that game, Chuck Stobbs, now the Red Sox pitcher, was the Granby ace. Lynn won, 21-14.

Agganis was still playing quarterback for Lynn in 1947 when it was invited again to another postseason game in the South. The Lynn kids passed that one up without much thanks, when they learned that a couple of their Negro teammates would be banned if the game was accepted.

Boston folks are never surprised, either, when Agganis takes the ball himself for a lengthy gain. They saw him break away for a 55-yard touchdown run against Salem High with eight separate tacklers taking a shot at Agganis and missing him, or being shaken off.

Baseball, as well as football scouts, were on his trail before he got out of high school. He was Lynn's first baseman and .450 hitter for most of three years, and then was named to the All-American High School team which played at Wrigley Field.

A left-handed passer, Agganis nevertheless adopted Sammy Baugh as his idol even in his prehigh school days, and demanded No. 33 on his jersey. He wore it at Lynn for three years, and on his graduation, the number was retired, never to be worn by another Lynn athlete, and his jersey placed in the school's trophy case.

At Boston U., Agganis still wears No. 33. It's against Donelli's numerical system which calls for the ends to wear numbers in the eighties, the tackles getting numbers in the seventies, etc., and the backs tagged with numbers in the twenties. But Donelli gladly waives the rule for Agganis.

Boston U. lucked into Agganis. At least luck and Tom Yawkey smiled on the school. At a time when colleges throughout the land were showering flattering scholarship offers on the graduating schoolboy, Yawkey suddenly stepped into the football picture at B. U.

The Red Sox owner was in the role of an indignant rich man. He was sore at Boston College, the big power in college football in the Hub since Harvard's decline. Because Boston College pulled its home games out of Fenway Park and cast its lot with the rival Braves Field, Yawkey had a revenge motive.

Yawkey was no alumnus of Boston U. but he wanted college football in his park. He gave B. U. a cheap rental, promised to help build up that stepchild of college football in Boston. There was all this talk about Agganis, the Lynn boy. Would he help B. U., Yawkey asked.

All of a sudden, Agganis popped up as a freshman at B. U. The fact that Bill Joyce, his high school coach, got a job as president of the Red Sox-owned Lynn baseball franchise in the New England League, might have been coincidental, or not. Anyway, it was a nice $8500-a-year-job for Joyce, the man who had more influence over Agganis than any other. And certainly Yawkey had Agganis' baseball talents in mind.

As a freshman, Agganis didn't disappoint Donelli. He threw 52 passes, completed 29 for an average of .559. He averaged 5 yards every time he carried the ball. He was going to look pretty good on that 1949 varsity.

If Yawkey wanted his revenge, he was not long finding it. Last month, when Boston College was playing Mississippi in its feature home game at Braves Field, Boston U. was meeting West Virginia at Fenway on the same night. Thanks to Agganis-conscious Boston fans, B. U. outdrew B. C. for the first time in history.

Until Agganis came along, the prime favorite with Boston football goers had been Charley O'Rourke, the famed passing-running quarterback of Leahy's B. C. team that went to the Sugar Bowl. Now in Boston you can hear, "O'Rourke was a bum compared to Agganis."

In the T-quarterback spot, Agganis is a smart ball manipulator, with the talents of a package thief. He has developed a "keep" play that unfolds wondrously with Agganis winding up as the ball-carrier. And when he cocks his throwing arm, panic has been setting in with all opposition. Maryland will be interested in another statistic: Only once this season when Agganis has been in there, has B. U. failed to score when it had the ball within the 10-yard line.

Embassy Is Real Home to Dean of Diplomats

Morgenstierne Family Long-Time Residents

(This is the first of a series on embassy homes and hostesses)

By Elizabeth Maguire

THE Norwegian Embassy, at 3401 Masachusetts ave., is really home to the Morgenstierne family. They have lived there for 15 years.

Wilhelm Munthe Morgenstierne, the Ambassador, is dean of the corps, and he has been told he is to remain at his present post in Washington until he retires from the service a number of years hence. Before coming to Washington, he served in New York for four years as Consul General.

The eldest daughter, Marjorie, will be presented to society here on December 20, and the youngest daughter, Solveig, who is 12, was born in Washington. Mrs. Munthe Morgenstierne is Canadian born. She is a handsome woman, with great charm and a winning personality.

There will be great excitement at the embassy this holiday season, with Marjorie a debutante. Her coming out party, a reception at the embassy, will be held from 5 to 7 in the white-paneled drawing room. The debutante's blonde hair and fair coloring will be well set off by her gown of white bouffant taffeta. The large embassy room will bloom with flowers, there will be a welcoming fire, and lights will glow on a many-tiered chandelier, with each light shaded in rose.

Daughter Paints From Memory

MARJORIE paints from memory with great talent. Two of her unframed works are in the library, and they catch the visitor's eye at once. One shows a moonlit country scene with an upside-down crescent moon, the other a narrow street in a Norwegian village, bright with sunlight and flowers.

Solveig also has a flair for painting, but her principal interest is in sports and animals. She loves her little Pekinese, Sniggy, who flounces about in a friendly fluff. He has no special tricks, he's just cute, she explains. Solveig's reddish gold hair and sweet smile win friends for her at first sight.

The Norwegian Embassy is largely furnished with pieces inherited by the Ambassador, and there are many objects about with interesting histories. On a table in the library rest a pair of miniature beige horses in replica. Short and fat, these are called snow horses in Norway, where they plow through deepest drifts with greatest ease.

Viking History Recalled

OVER the mantel in the library hangs a painting of Northeast Harbor by Jonas Lie, Norwegian painter who has achieved fame in America. On a window ledge by the staircase stands a miniature copy of the Kensington Stone, found some 50 years ago near Alexandria, Minn. The original dates back to the fourteenth

Lady Scribes Thrilled As New Arms Blaze at Brass-Bound Display

FORT BENNING, GA., Nov. 5.—For the first time since the shows were originated by the late Secretary of Defense Forrestal, women reporters were invited to be present at the fifth joint civilian orientation conference here.

Some 64 carefully selected representative civilians, who have been undergoing a lesson course at the Pentagon, were flown down to Fort Benning to see what the infantry could "do." Accompanying them in a flight of six four-motored planes were most of the nation's highest brass—Secretary of Defense Johnson, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Gen. Omar Bradley, Secretary of the Air Force Symington, Gen. Hoyt S. Vandenberg, Secretary of the Navy Matthews, Adm. Forrest P. Sherman, new Chief of Naval Operations, who since taking over as a member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff has automatically been promoted to full admiral.

The brass started arriving at 9:30 this morning at Lawson Air Base, separate command within Fort Benning, the planes landing singly at regulated intervals. An honor guard made up of a composite group from the Third Army's 30th Regiment was drawn up complete with a brace of tanks and heavy guns along the runway. First in was Secretary Symington's plane, followed closely by Secretary Johnson's C-54. Secretary Johnson, in a salt and pepper suit and matching overcoat, came down the ramp

IN A GRAY faille gown trimmed with pink roses, Mme. Morgenstierne is off to a dinner and dance at the 1925 F Street Club. Here she pauses for her picture on the steps of the embassy staircase. On the wall behind hangs a portrait of Fridtjof Nansen, famous explorer. During the First World War the Ambassador came over as Mr. Nansen's secretary on a special purchasing mission, and they later became great friends. In the embassy library are a number of drawings by the explorer, including one of the ship "Fram" in which he voyaged to the North Pole. On a window ledge by the staircase is a miniature copy of the Kensington stone, found some 50 years ago in Minnesota and now in the Smithsonian Institution. The stone is believed to have been carved by the Vikings who traveled inland from the east coast in the fourteenth century

By Tom Kelley—The Washington Post

MOTHER and daughter leave the embassy for a stroll down Massachusetts ave. in the afternoon sunshine. Marjorie Morgenstierne (left) spends the weekdays at Mount Vernon Junior College, and her weekends at the embassy with her parents, the Ambassador and Mme. Morgenstierne. Mme. Morgenstierne (right) likes to get in a brisk walk every day, and on Saturday afternoons she is usually accompanied by her daughter. After the walk they will have tea in the library with the Ambassador

Mary Haworth's Mail

Completely Compatible And Deeply in Love With Improvident Man, Woman Is Unstrung by Family's Emphasis on Importance of Security

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am in my late thirties, still attractive and I hold a very good position. I have been engaged for over a year. My fiance is a fine looking man, we have the same background, enjoy the same things and understand each other perfectly.

However, before we met, Evan had led a stormy life, having affairs with women and spending money as fast as he made it; but meeting me seems to have changed him completely. He now spends all his evenings with me, visiting mutual friends, going to movies or concerts.

Evan started on a new job a couple of years ago and is doing well, but unfortunately hasn't managed to save anything, as he is paying for a car that his work requires, etc. I am willing to keep my job and help him, but I want him to have at least enough saved for the wedding expenses—i. e., suits, down payment on furniture, honeymoon trip, etc. Do you think I am being "foolishly romantic," as my family puts it, accepting marriage under these conditions?

Conflict Allows No Peace of Mind

THERE is another man who also proposed to me a year ago and whom my family would like me to consider. If I weren't so much in love with my fiance I suppose I would accept him, as he is kind, hard working and well established; but I am not attracted to him physically. Do you think that at my age, to quote my family, I should look for security rather than love?

I get terribly discouraged and depressed at times and then I feel like breaking the engagement and marrying the other man. But other times I am so perfectly happy with Evan that I don't seem to want anything but to be with him. The problem is upsetting my peace of mind so badly that I have decided to come to you for help. Do you see anything wrong with me? Please advise. E. L.

Case of Person Afraid to Move

DEAR E. L.: Two marriage proposals in a year indicate above-average attractiveness in a woman your age, if both were proffered by passable men; thus it is something of a minor mystery why you weren't married long ago. But perhaps your tremendous unconscious dependency upon your family's guidance and approval for "security" is the answer.

It occurs to me that you feel stymied to the point of distraction in veering towards marriage to Evan, chiefly because your feelings for him are opposed by your family's feelings against. And the older you grow, the less courage you have to put your judgment, versus theirs, to decisive test. I think that's what you signify when you ask, "Should I look for security rather than love?" Fundamentally, you are afraid to move. That's what the psychological impasse amounts to.

When a person bogs down in this type of indecision, it isn't over the specific situation or choice confronting him, actually. Rather it means that his capacity to think and act for himself hasn't been normally developed by proper exercise; and that the corrosive effects on personality of this "dysfunction" are beginning to break out, all of a sudden, seemingly.

Learn to Steer Your Own Canoe

Thus creative help for you in this predicament can't be rendered in the terms you ask, namely, in terms of repeating your family's habitual mistake, of telling you emphatically what presumably is "best" for you. What you need to learn, somehow, is to steer your own canoe out into the river of life, ready to risk without craven retreat whatever hazards or trials may emerge as the journey unfolds.

As between settling for stagnant security with a tedious provider, or having bright companionship on a day-to-day basis of substance, I personally would take the latter if a choice must be made; but that is a matter of taste, or maybe of philosophy. I wouldn't urge it on any who might feel lost without visible worldly protection.

You write from a fairly enlightened social climate, where good psychological counsel should be available; and my advice is to get that type of navigator help in piloting your own way to a decision that will work for, or satisfy, you. M. H.

BALMAIN'S preference for the Chinese touch in his collection this season is reflected in this jaunty little coolie coat of midnight blue Persian lamb.

Balmain Compliments Capital

Newest Furs Going Solar Spectral

By Peggy Preston

FURS tinted the colors of the rainbow—in a fashion that was only a fancy a year ago—are on their way to becoming accepted modes.

Esther Dorothy, New York fur stylist, was a pioneer in the field of dyeing furs in exotic and brilliant tones. Starting with navy, she branched out into green, and this season introduced her strawberry colored mole and seal skins. Other designers followed suit, and latest to join the ranks is Pierre Balmain, the up and coming young French designer. M. Balmain, however, has gone a step further, by tinting such precious skins as Russian broadtail and Persian lamb; has similar plans for sable, mink and squirrel. But so far, he stops with midnight blue.

In Washington this week to present a collection of eight fur designs which he executed for Julius Garfinckel & Co., M. Balmain observed:

"As long as women continue to wear black furs during the winter and in artificial lights, the new blue-black dye would be a more flattering tone. Also, it is complementary to both black and blue ensembles."

In this way the clever Frenchman neatly gets around the critics' cry against colored furs which, they claim, are impractical and a mere fad. If they are more becoming (and navy is certainly easier for most women to wear than black) who cares if they are impractical?

Feats With Pelts

ACTUALLY, the Balmain designs are more noteworthy and new than the color he employs. Primarily a dress designer, he is taking his first major fling at fur garments, and he has accomplished some rather interesting feats.

In the first place, he has treated soft, silky broadcloth and heavier Persian lamb, as though they were fabrics, rather than animal pelts. In his long, fitted coats he has used the customary cloth techniques of eliminating the waist seams, concentrating on a molded shoulderline and curved body seams.

The finished coats have little of the bulky look of ordinary fur garments. One of the most fascinating of his designs is done with midnight blue wool and broadtail. It is composed of a skirt and sweater-like top with long, slim sleeves and stand-up collar of fur.

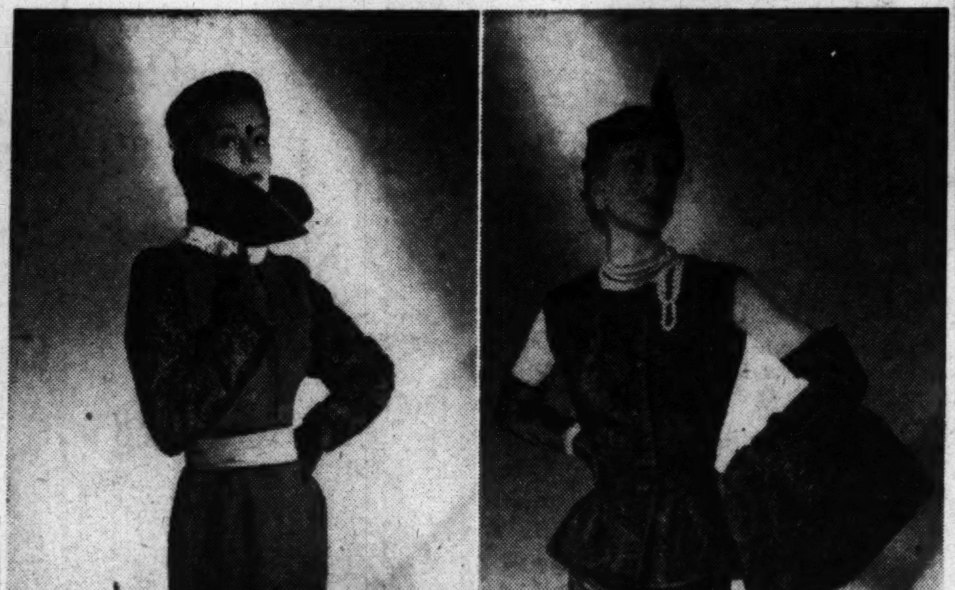
Push-Up Sleeves

BALMAIN has also created some novel effects in sleeves, always a focal point in any fur coat. Almost without exception they follow the push-up pattern, are big and billowing, and fall in soft, deep folds. In a brief, hipbone length shortie, of broadtail, the sleeves are huge and mounted on slender 5-inch cuffs. They may be adjusted to any length from the elbow to the wrist.

Balmain foresakes his midnight blues in two coats in the collection. One is a silverblue mink, the color of which comes from breeding, not dyeing. A wrap-around jacket, it has a flared back that is several inches longer than the rest of the coat.

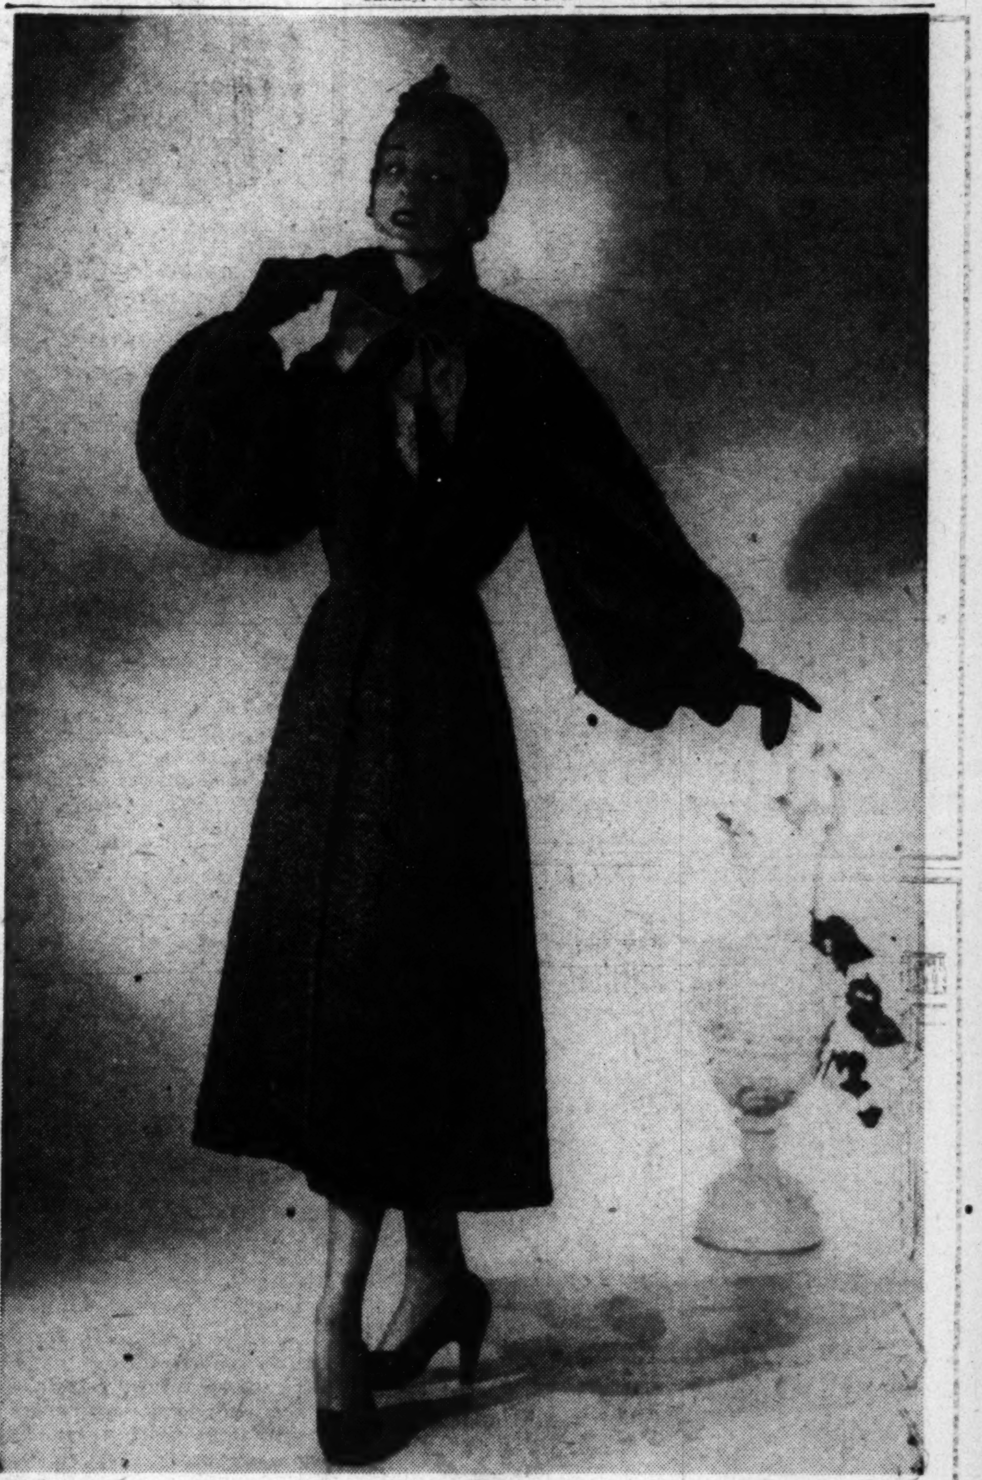
His other exception is a three-quarter length jacket of Matara Alaska sealskin, with deep pockets and rounded, shawl-like collar.

In presenting this group of furs, Balmain violates a traditional pattern of French designers. It is customary to show top-ranking designs first in Paris, then in America. But Balmain brings the mountain to Mohammed in this instance. His new furs, made up in New York, will not be seen in Paris until his midseason showing there later this month.



VERSATILITY plays a major role in this four-way costume combining fabric and Russian broadtail. At left, a two-piece suit of navy wool with satin sash at the waistline. Slim sleeves and stand-up collar are of fur, as is the inner lining of the sweater top.

At right, the matching cardigan, sleeveless and buttoning up to a collarless line. May be worn over the sweater, or with an evening skirt, as shown here. Skirt and gloves are of blue satin, the muff of broadtail



PERSIAN LAMB, again in the midnight blue tone, is treated as a cloth in this full-length coat. Fitted at the waistline, it has a high winged collar that is held with a huge red taffeta bow. Big, billowing sleeves follow the push-up pattern and may be anchored at the elbow. Balmain's unique designs of luxury furs tinted midnight blue are the newest stars on the local fashion scene. Introduced here this week by the Paris designer, they are available at Julius Garfinckel & Co.

Say Agriculture Pundits

You'll Be Eating More Meat, Come 1950

By Lucia Brown

WHAT will you eat in 1950? "Plenty, I hope," may be your only reply to this question, but the Department of Agriculture has been doing some figuring and comes up with fairly specific predictions. They were under discussion last week at the Agricultural Outlook Conference here.

There'll be more meat on your menus, the Department believes. The average eaten by every person in the country may be close to 150 pounds, compared with 147 in 1949.

Pork will account for most of the step-up. Present indications are there'll be about five pounds more apiece, while the supply of beef and veal will be just about the same. When it comes to lamb and mutton, you'll probably be eating even less than in 1949.

JUST as many eggs are in the offing for 1950 as you ate in '49, and a slight increase appears possible. You may get a little less chicken and turkey, the Department says, but you'll still be eating a lot more than before the war. And here's the best news of all: Prices for eggs, chickens and turkeys are all expected to average less than in 1949.

Less milk and cream on your table and more butter and cheese are likely next year, the Department says. Whole milk consumption has been declining steadily in this country to a near-record low of 742 pounds per capita this year and the fall may continue.

Since there'll be plenty of milk available, though, more of it will go into such manufactured dairy products as butter, cheese, and dry skim milk. It's likely that retail prices for all dairy products will be slightly less.

Butter Nudges Margarine

YOU'LL probably be putting less margarine in your market basket as a result of a decline in the price of butter. This will continue a trend started back in the fall of '48. The use of cooking oils is expected to be about the same.

Less canned vegetables will be available for your table in the first six months of 1950, but here's a heartening note: Beans will be bountiful—good old dry beans. Supplies of Boston's favorite food are now at record heights, and the Department says there's no risk of an empty bean pot anytime in '50.

Tobé Says...

Don't Wait Until Style's on Wane

I KNOW that many women think it's safer to wait until a new fashion is worn by everyone before buying it.

Now it usually takes a brand new fashion a year to become really popular. Then it has another year or so when it's the thing every woman wants and wears. After that it begins to peter out slowly—but sometimes collapses all too suddenly.

So you see, if you are daring enough to adopt a smart fashion when it first appears, you'll get a longer life out of it than if you wait until it's so "safe" that it's on its way out.

Believe me when I say its economical as well as smart to be a fashion leader!

MRS. GORDON GRAY, wife of the Secretary of the Army, is surrounded by her favorite pastimes, her boys. The baby, 2-year-old Bernard, is sitting with his mother. The eldest, 10-year-old Gordon, is on the floor. Burton, or "Button," who is 8, is standing behind Mrs. Gray, and 6-year-old Boyden is at her left. The Grays, whose home town is Winston-Salem, N. C., are renting a house in Washington just off Massachusetts ave. on 24th st.

Army Keeps 'Button's' Father Busy Now

By Norma Lanum

ONE day last week several young students at the Potomac School got together to talk about their famous fathers.

"And just how often do you see your dad?" a sophisticated classmate asked 8-year-old Burton (or "Button") Gray, one of the four sons of Secretary of the Army and Mrs. Gordon Gray.

"Well, I don't get to see him very often," Button replied. "But when I do, he makes up for it!"

"Making up for it" is one of the biggest jobs in the Gray household, according to tall, slim Mrs. Gray. Children of busy fathers usually miss a great part of the family home life that's important to growing up, she explains.

Her major attempt to create more "home-living" for the boys is the family breakfast.

Breakfast Replaces Dinner

FOR the first time in the three years they have lived in Washington the Grays—all six of them—are now breakfasting together.

This family breakfast, which has been instituted for nearly a month, takes the place of the family dinner that most other children enjoy.

Secretary Gray is at his Pentagon desk so late in the evening that his wife feels it unwise to postpone the children's evening meal until his return. The youngsters usually eat early, with mother and dad waiting until later for their dinner.

But breakfast "makes up for it." The kids love this morning family meal, says Mrs. Gray. And it always starts early enough that they don't have to rush.

Boys Suit Her Fine

RANGING from 10 to 2, the Gray boys are Gordon (or Gizzard), Burton, Boyden and Bernard. "Sounds like a vaudeville team, doesn't it?" laughs their "mommy."

Mrs. Gray insists she can't call them all from the back yard of their home on 24th st. without stuttering. "It's impossible to get past those three Bs."

The Army official's wife has been to Europe twice, once with her parents and another time with her husband. But the only trips she really enjoys are those that lead to Winston-Salem, N. C., her own and her husband's "home town."

JANE GRAY hasn't done any housecleaning or cooking since her husband—heir to a multimillion-dollar tobacco company—was a second lieutenant at Fort Benning, Ga.

It was a lot of fun then, though, she admits. The family—only three boys at the time—enjoyed it, too, until she started working on elaborate complicated dishes. "Then I had to sit down and eat it all myself."

The Secretary's wife follows a simple daily routine. She reads the papers and a few magazines, serves on several charity boards throughout the city, and keeps close tab on the youngsters' doings.

She's on the boards of Jango, St. John's Orphanage, Army Relief Society and the National Symphony. She's also a member of the Junior League.

But Mrs. Gray spends most of her time with those boys, and she's proud of them as a mother can be. Gordon, she will boast, is developing into quite a writer, and she wants him to be a newspaper man. "You should have seen his story on Christopher Columbus!"

Top U.N. Woman Jobholder

She's One to See About World's Living

By Lydia Van Zandt

Lake Success, N. Y.—"Alva Myrdal is the person you want to see," is the advice given anyone coming here in search of information about the program of the United Nations for improving living conditions for the peoples of the world.

Today she is the only woman holding a top ranking job in the U. N. secretariat. As principal director of the United Nations Department of Social Affairs this distinguished woman sociologist, writer, and mother of three children is responsible for coordinating the work of the U. N. committees, commissions and specialized agencies in all fields of social welfare.

She and her staff also work closely with observers for the nongovernmental organizations which have consultative status or are associated with the U. N. through the Economic and Social Council.

Speaks English

Mrs. Myrdal speaks English with only a slight accent and she knows the United States well. As a Rockefeller scholarship student she attended Columbia and several other universities in different parts of the country. Later she made a lecture tour which brought the number of States she has visited up to 40.

"It was a wonderful experience going to towns and cities all over this country and being entertained in the homes. I felt I really got to know America and Americans," said this former president of the Swedish Business and Professional Women's Clubs and vice president of the International Federation.

"I spent the years from 1938 to 1940 here with my husband and children while my husband did research for his book, 'An American Dilemna,' and I wrote 'Nation and Family' published by Harpers," Mrs. Myrdal explained.

Titles of her other publications show the scope of her interests and the background of research she brings to her U. N. position. Her books include "Crisis in the Population Problem," "Town Children," "Real Toys," "Contact With America," "Cross Section of Great Britain '42," and Post-war Planning '44." She has been editor of a round table cooperative movement publication and of "Via Succia"—a multi-ligual refugee magazine.

"We had many refugees from neighboring countries which were occupied by the Nazis. Most of these people couldn't read Swedish, and so we published a magazine for them with articles printed in different languages," she said.

Mrs. Myrdal's home, her children and her husband are at present in Geneva, Switzerland, where Prof. Gunnar Myrdal is executive secretary for the U. N. Economic Commission for Europe.

Travels by Air

Since she became an international civil servant here at Lake Success last February she has flown back to Paris and Geneva once to attend U. N. meetings. Business also took her on a flight to South America to learn what U. N. could do for the earthquake victims in Ecuador.

"We haven't funds to do a great deal but a large-scale feeding program for children has been started by UNICEF (the U. N. International Children's Emergency Fund)," said Mrs. Myrdal. "For three years our department has had funds to provide experts in social fields such as housing and social welfare."

MRS. ALVA MYRDAL
. . . Swedish sociologist, writer

There are 107 women in Mrs. Myrdal's department, of which 16 hold intermediate or senior posts. "We have a larger number of women in high posts than any other department, except the Bureau of Documents," the new director revealed.

On the staff are Mrs. Lakshmi Menon from India, new chief of the section on the status of women, and her assistant, Mrs. Grinberg-Vinaver, an experienced French lawyer.

During a General Assembly session Mrs. Myrdal is very busy. Her department prepares the documents used by Committee Three (the Social, Humanitarian and Cultural Committee) to which most of the women delegates are assigned. Every document has to be drafted in one of the three official languages, French, Spanish or English and then reproduced in the other two. As a representative of the secretary general either Mrs. Myrdal or Mr. Henri Laugier, assistant secretary general in charge of the Department of Social Affairs, attends every meeting of Committee Three.

In six different places the U. N. Charter promises equal rights and opportunities to men and women. At the present time the secretariat has a secretary general and eight assistant secretaries general, each of a different nationality, but there is not a woman among them.

Reporting directly to one of the assistant secretaries general, Mrs. Myrdal, director of the Department of Social Affairs, is the only woman among the next highest level of officials. With the experience and the personality which she brings to this position she may be able to prove that qualified women have a place in the highest ranks of the United Nations secretariat.

Ballots Before Balls for Biddles

By Marie McNair

FORMER ATTORNEY GENERAL and Mrs. Francis Biddle aren't coming back to Washington until they vote for a new city comptroller and city treasurer in Philadelphia Tuesday.

For the Biddles, with a house in Georgetown, another in New Jersey, do their voting in Pennsylvania, where they've maintained a legal residence for years.

This year the ballot is particularly important, Mr. and Mrs. Biddle believe—moreover, it's "time for a change." In town briefly last week, and staying with the Misses Harriet and Mary Winslow, Mrs. Biddle was here only to check on the redecorating progress of her 31st st. house. The summer months she spent on Cape Cod and at Harvey Cedars, N. J., with Mr. Biddle, both turning out poetry and prose. Mr. Biddle, whose biography of Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes made enchanting reading, is at work on another book. Mrs. Biddle, widely known as Katherine Garrison Chapin, is turning out new verse.

Her "Plain Chant for America" first published almost a dozen years ago, followed two books of verse, "Time Has No Shadow" and "Outside the World." She wrote the words for a symphonic poem, "Lament for the Stolen" with a chorus of 250 voices. "And They Lynched Him to a Tree," inspired by a great sympathy for the Negro race, had William Grant Still as composer of the musical score.

So—look for something equally beautiful and fine to come from the Biddle pen.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Allen is looking into the boarding school situation for George and John and is hoping that she won't leave Washington until after they've all been together for Christmas.

How to Bake Turkey Leg—How To Make Bayberry Candles at Home

I'd appreciate it very much if you would tell me how to bake a a turkey leg. They sell these by the piece at some stores, and there have been several times when I have wanted to buy one but didn't know how long to cook per pound, or in what oven temperature. Please enlighten me. C. A. T.

The best way to cook a turkey leg so that it will be tender and juicy is to use moist heat that is, to braise it. Start by fastening the loose skin at the cut end securely over the exposed meat with toothpicks or metal skewers. This helps to lessen loss of moisture from the meat.

Now, rub flour which has been seasoned with salt and pepper all over the leg. When well floured, brown well all surfaces of the leg in hot fat. As soon as it is golden brown, add a little water and cover tightly. Cook over low heat on top of the stove or in an oven at 325 degrees F. for 2 to 3 hours, defending upon the size. It is done when the joint moves easily.

If you wish dressing with the turkey leg, buy a gizzard or two. Wash well, just cover with salted water, and simmer for an hour or so, until very tender. If you wish you can add some onion and celery to the broth in which the gizzard is boiled for added flavor.

When tender, remove gizzards from broth, cut up into small pieces and return to broth. Pour broth and gizzard over 2 or 3 cups of dry, crumbled bread, then add some onion, sage and salt to taste. The dressing should be damp, but not wet. Mix well and put into the over to bake for 30 to 40 minutes.

Please tell me what to do next. I have gathered bayberries. Now, how do I get wax from them and how do I make a candle from the wax? I'd like to make some for Christmas gifts. Any other suggestions? How do I mold them? R. F.

The best suggestions I have found for making bayberry candles are a bit sketchy, but perhaps enough for you to do the job.

One set of directions starts out with gay abandon by saying: "Toss the berries in a pot of boiling water." The idea here seems to be to cook the berries enough to release the wax which will float to the top of the pot as the water is allowed to cool.

The first extraction will have a grimy color, but the wax can be further purified by placing again in clear water, brought to a boil and again let cool. The wax is then removed from the top of the water.

When thus purified, the wax should be remelted and poured into the molds. For molds, you can use star or fancy shaped salad molds, tall straight olive bottles (break the bottle to release the candle when hard)—in short, anything around your house which will hold wax in a shape you like.

For wicks, use wick remnants from partially burned candles—they burn better than heavy cord or other improvised materials.

Years ago I did some painting and now I think I would like to paint some trays. I have all necessary equipment, but am very anxious to get some patterns to go by. Will you tell me where can get them? F. P. E.

You can get patterns and directions for painting your tray if you will write for a booklet called "Gifts for Grownups," Woman's Home Companion, Service Bureau, 250 Park ave. New York 17, N. Y. Send 25 cents in stamps or money order for the booklet. In addition to the tray patterns, you will find in the booklet directions for making other Christmas gifts for adults—a most usuable booklet to have these days!

Have you the recipe to a Swedish holiday drink-punch called "Glug"? We visited people in Detroit last Christmas and they served this punch hot—it tasted a lot like mincemeat pie. J. McK.

I have not been able to find a drink called Glug, but since the Swedish drink Glogg answers your description, I'm wondering if it is the one you mean. This recipe is from "Good Food From Sweden" by Ingas Norberg (M. Barrows & Co., Inc., 114 East 32d st., New York 16, N. Y.). Here's what the author has to say about Glogg:

"Glogg brings to your mind visions of a Swedish Christmas, with snow and cold outside, and the family gathering 'round a crackling fire at home, drinking the health of those near and dear ones who have to spend their Christmas in the far corners of the world. A Swedish sleigh-party without Glogg to warm them after the long drive through snow-plowed forests would be unthinkable."

The beverage may be made in several ways. Here is one good recipe suggested by Miss Norberg:

FIRST STEP in braising—the best way to cook a turkey leg—is to brown the meat in hot fat

GLOGG

- 2 bottles Sherry (domestic)
- ½ bottle brandy
- 5 pieces citrus peel
- ¾ cup almonds
- 5 pieces stick cinnamon
- 10 cloves
- 1 cup raisins

Cook spices in enough wine to cover them for 15 minutes. Bottle with the rest of the wine and brandy and leave for a few days before serving. It will keep indefinitely. Always serve hot.

If you are interested, there is another, more complicated, recipe for Glogg given in the above-mentioned book.

When baking cookies, does it matter whether you use cake flour or all-purpose flour if the recipe doesn't specify a definite kind? C. A. T.

In a cookie recipe when no special kind of flour is specified, all-purpose flour is the flour to use. Cake flour is seldom used in cookies because it is more expensive and does not make a better product than all-purpose flour. On the other hand, cake flour is preferable in making cakes because with it you can get a lighter, and finer textured cake than is possible with all-purpose flour.

Cake flour and all-purpose flour are not interchangeable in a recipe, cup for cup. If a recipe calls for one cup of all-purpose flour and you wish to substitute cake flour, you should use one cup plus 2 tablespoons of cake flour. If a recipe calls for one cup cake flour and you wish to substitute all purpose flour, use 2 tablespoons less than one cup.

Your "Viking Fruit Cake," printed recently, sounds "yummy." Now. for the $64 question: Can this be baked in iron muffin pans? We always send out boxes of cookies to friends at Christmas time and the idea of a small fruit cake in the center appeals to me more than slices. J. M. B.

Iron muffin pans are a very good choice for baking small fruit cakes because the weight of the pans will reduce crust formation, and excessive drying out. Before placing the cake batter into the pans, line them with paper muffin cups or aluminum foil. When you bake such very small cakes, cut down baking to 1½ or 2 hours.

Cooking Cues . . .

One of the most delicious of the cheeses coming from Switzerland these days is Emmenthaler; grate and use it in a cheese souffle, or serve it with fresh fruit for dessert. It is delicious, too, in sandwiches.

Children usually enjoy an open luncheon sandwich of toast, tomato slices, cheese sauce, and crisp bacon strips. Applesauce and cookies, with milk of course, finish off a luncheon of this kind perfectly.

Sliced apples, fried in butter and sprinkled with brown sugar, are delicious served with crisp bacon strips, brown pork sausage links, and thin slices of frizzled ham for a breakfast treat.

Evaporated milk helps keep food bills within bounds, and adds valuable nutrients to cereals, cream soups, desserts.

For Friday night supper serve an economical menu of halibut with tomato sauce, baked potatoes, buttered Swiss chard and a compote of dried fruit and lemon or orange slices for dessert.

Washington Club a Quiet Haven for Half-Century

By Genevieve Reynolds

THE Nation's Capital is a city with approximately 800 women's organizations. Dean of them all is the 58-year-old Washington Club.

When the articles of incorporation were signed on April 6, 1898 the object of the club was stated thus: "The particular business and object of our society is the establishment, maintenance and management of a club for literary purposes, mutual improvement and the promotion of social intercourse."

For over a half-century the Washington Club has adhered to its original purpose. That urge to institute reforms or delve into politics which has transformed most women's organizations from culture to crusading has not disturbed the tranquillity of this group.

While members as a body do not go in for adopting resolutions or inaugurating welfare projects, individuals do pile up enviable records. They accomplish civic duties through other organizations like the Twentieth Century Club, hospital boards, the Community Chest and the Red Cross.

Club Remains Quiet Haven

ACTUALLY, the club's 500 members have helped to shape the history of the District of Columbia. A majority of the membership is drawn from conservative old families or "Cave Dwellers," who have participated actively in the city's civic and social affairs. But members prefer to keep the club as a quiet haven to rest and chat after more arduous social and political events.

One of the best informed groups in the Capital, its members keep abreast of the times through reading, lectures and listening to outstanding speakers—in addition to travel. Mrs. Gilbert Grosvenor, current president, has visited all parts of the world, including remote sections of Tibet.

Activities of the club take place on the second floor of its handsome, stately headquarters at 1701 K st. nw. This spacious mansion once was the home of Senator Stanford, founder of Leland Stanford Junior College. Former Vice President Charles W. Fairbanks purchased the house for his official residence during his tenure of office. Later it served as the Russian Embassy—before the Soviet regime.

Book Chats a Regular Feature

FROM mid-October to May, book chats are held each Monday at 11 a. m. In the ballroom, underneath a sparkling crystal chandelier, books on poetry, fiction, biography, history and travel are reviewed. On November 7 Mrs. Barton Stone Embry will discuss "The Mature Mind" by H. A. Overstreet. Mrs. James W. Farmer will review "The Aspirin Age" on November 14. Other book talks scheduled include "Dinner at Antoines," to be reviewed November 21 by Mrs. James I. Fly; and "Frank and Lillian Gilbreth, Partners for Life" on November 28 with Mrs. Frank Forest Bunker reviewing. Mrs. E. Horace Siegler is directing the book chats this year, which occasionally are followed by special luncheons.

It's generally "Lecture Morning" on Tuesdays when invited speakers air their views on a variety of subjects. Assistant Secretary of State Ernest A. Gross will discuss "Important Developments in American Relations with the United Nations" on November 8. On November 15, William W. Goodrich, principal attorney, Federal Security Agency, will outline "The Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act." An illustrated talk on "A Summer Trip in the Peruvian Highlands" will be given by Mrs. Grosvenor on November 22.

Mme. Camille Chautemps, concert pianist, will be the artist at the musical hour, November 29. During November and December Mrs. Cloyd Heck Marvin will review current Broadway plays. Members of the committee in charge of the Tuesday programs include Mrs. William E. Leahy, chairman; Mrs. Barton Stone Embry, co-chairman; Mrs. Paul E. Lesh, secretary.

Dinners Are Gala Events

GALA events are the monthly Thursday night dinners with world personalities as honor guests and speakers. Mme. Vijaya Lakshmi Pandit, the Ambassador from India, will appear in that role on November 10. Mrs. Frank Forest Bunker, a past president, supervises the Thursday night dinner programs.

Language classes are held during the week under the chairmanship of Mrs. Harold Hanning. Professor Ramon Ramos is instructor for the Monday Spanish lessons. Henri de Marne teaches French classes on Fridays.

A special series of lectures on scientific developments will be given during May. Mrs. Alexander Wetmore is chairman of the series.

Library Is Well Filled

A PRIVATE library of over 8000 volumes occupies most of the third floor of the clubhouse. It is in charge of a trained librarian and covers a wide range—from scientific and philosophical texts down to "whodunits." Some august readers select these crime thrillers without apologies, one member mischievously reports. However, other matrons take care to explain that they are acting merely as agents for husbands or children who fancy such light literature. This library has been built up by individual gifts and bequests of club members.

Private parties are often arranged at the club, but the tearoom is open daily from 4 to 6 p. m. for members and guests.

So throughout the years the Washington Club, which was formed so that women could have a club to enjoy as men enjoy their clubs, firmly has clung to its intent.

On the Move

Jeffersonian Lore Clings to Brief Street

By Dorothy E. Boyle

Next to designing houses for himself Jefferson delighted in designing them for others. He reputedly (and disputedly) designed 1071 Thomas Jefferson st. in Georgetown, built in the 1780's of brick from the old Potomac. Owned and occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Robert Gordon McKay who purchased it from Miss Harriet Holther, it was leased through the war years to Sir James and Lady Grigg of the British Embassy staff.

Miss Marguerite McKenna of the State Department, her sister, Miss Rose, who is with the National Catholic Welfare Conference, and Miss Katherine Davis, a Government secretary, are sharing the little house at 1064. The lease was made through the office of Walker & Dunlop, Inc., for Mrs. Maria Elena Serralles of Kensington, who is visiting her family in Mexico.

Jefferson married a young, attractive and fairly wealthy widow named Martha Wayles Shelton on January 1, 1772. Their marriage was said to be one of the most successful known to biographical literature.

The little gray house with the maroon door at 1062, also owned by Mrs. Serralles, has been leased to Miss Virginia Metz and Miss Mimi Gloninger, both medical secretaries, through the office of J. Leo Kolb. Miss Metz is at the Naval Hospital in Bethesda and Miss Gloninger at Georgetown Hospital.

1063, owned by Mrs. James Barton, daughter of the late Admiral C. C. Hartigan, has been leased to four career girls, Miss Elizabeth Lowe, Miss Ann Lewis, Miss Joan Hawkinson and Miss Georgia Lamon. Mrs. Barton is visiting her brother and sister-in-law, Commander and Mrs. C. C. Hartigan, jr., in Venezuela. Mrs. Hartigan, sr., who recently purchased 2905 N st., is in California caring for her sister, Mrs. Kathleen Norris, the well-known novelist, who has been ill. The lease was negotiated through the office of Sandoz.

The years 1781 and 1782 were the most sorrowful of Jefferson's life. Added to political chaos, in April, 1781, he lost a young daughter and in September, 1782, his wife.

The part-time home of Brig. Gen. and Mrs. John Magruder is at 1061 but most of their time is spent at Kilmarnock, near Tides Inn, Va. The Magruders purchased this a few years ago from Mrs. Albert d'Amecourt and Mrs. Jean Davidson through the office of Dorothy Wood.

"All my wishes end where I hope my days will end, at Monticello," said Jefferson and it was there that he died.

1060 is the last of the group of five-little-houses-in-a-row rumored to have been built at one time to accommodate a group of Scandinavians imported to run the canal barges in later years. This house was recently sold by Mr. Robert Weber to the present occupant, John Kendrick of the Department of Commerce.

For another side of the many-faceted Jefferson read Helen Duprey Bullock's book, "My Head and My Heart," a collection of letters written by him to one of the beauties of the English court, Maria Cosway, wife of the most popular miniature painter of that era.

Mrs. J. Ross Eakin owns and occupies 1059, another of the little Victorian houses done over by Mrs. d'Amecourt and Mrs. Davidson, and purchased through the office of Dorothy Wood a few years ago.

Those hitherto unpublished letters of Jefferson's incidentally, were written with his left hand because while strolling with a friend near Paris he fell and broke his rght wrist. Most of them were unsigned to conceal his identity.

Col. and Mrs. Grady Lewis bought the third and last of the group of little houses done over by the d'Amecourt-Davidson combine at 1057 on the northeast corner of the historic old canal. This formerly belonged to Mr. and Mrs. Robert P. Girardon.

On the northwest corner stands the building long identified as Masonic Lodge, No. 9, of Maryland, which was the first Masonic temple in the District of Columbia. It was this group of Masons that marched in full regalia through the muddy streets to officiate at the laying of the cornerstone of the Capitol, September 18, 1793. George Washington personally took part and then turned the marble gavel over to Mr. Valentine Reintzell, master of that lodge at that time. This gavel is today considered one of the most sacred possessions of Potomac Lodge (the former No. 9's later designation) and reposes in a special box with a glass front in the main vault of the Georgetown branch of Riggs National Bank. After a long period of idleness during which time it even served as a grocery store, the old lodge was purchased in 1946 by Mr. and Mrs. Martin Isen. Through their vision and foresight it has been converted into four apartments one of which is occupied by the Isens and the others leased to Harold M. Stern of the State Department, Capt. Alfred J. Nuthall who is with the protocol office in the foreign liaison branch of the Department of the Air Force, and Joseph Soroghan of the Fairchild Aviation Corp.

Leesburg News Notes

Mme. Jean Chatel Is Speaker At Loudoun Woman's Club

By M. Grace Brooks

Leesburg, Va., Nov. 5.—Mme. Jean Chatel was the guest speaker at a meeting of the Woman's Club of Loudoun held this afternoon at the Purcellville library. The meeting was under the sponsorship of the Legislation and Citizenship Department of the club, of which Mrs. William B. Curtis is chairman. Mrs. Arthur S. Jenkins, sr., presided. The meeting was open to the public.

Using "Legislation and Citizenship" as her topic, Mme. Chatel described interesting personal experiences to illustrate her talk. She is an American citizen, although married to a Frenchman. His work brings them to this country for a part of each year, and they maintain a home in Washington while here.

During the war, the Chatels were in France and suffered under the occupation along with their countrymen. They were active in the resistance movement and maintained a resistance post on the grounds of their chateau.

Mrs. Hunter H. Fultz entertained at a bridal shower on Friday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John L. Carr. Honor guest was the Carr's daughter, Mrs. Rudolph I. Harding. Twenty-five guests were present.

Mrs. Harding, the former Miss Mary Ellen Carr, and Mr. Harding were married Wednesday afternoon in the Presbyterian Church in Frederick, Md. The double ring ceremony was performed by Rev. W. Merval Weaver.

The bride wore a brown gabardine suit with brown hat and alligator bag and shoes. Her corsage was yellow rosebuds.

The bridegroom, son of Ernest T. Harding of Ashburn and the late Mrs. Harding, served four years in the Air Corps during the war. He is now employed by General Mills. The bride is a secretary in the office of Paxson and Hawthorne in Leesburg.

Mr. and Mrs. David N. Rust, jr., William S. The Eiffel Tower has nothing on us . . . we're both a well-seasoned 60

Yes, we're just as old as the Eiffel Tower, and in our way we're every bit as much of a landmark. Way back in 1889 we were down in Center Market . . . delivered our posies by pony-wagon. But that was 60 years ago, and we've come a long way. Our 60th Anniversary marks our debut in Silver Spring, so today GUDE'S has 4 stores. We're a whole lot bigger, but our object in life is still the same . . . to supply greater Washington with beautiful flowers at always-reasonable prices—to keep our service always the finest.

Embassy Hostess

century and is now in the Smithsonian Institution. Historians believe it was carved by the Vikings.

In the square dining room of the embassy hangs a large oil painting of a Norwegian peasant smoking a pipe in the early spring sunshine. Spring is an important season in Norway coming in mid-April after a long dark winter. Another lovely painting in the embassy is a portrait of Mrs. Morgenstierne in scarlet after-skiing costume.

Dancing Replaces Skiing

BOTH the Ambassador and Mme. Morgenstierne are fond of skiing (she-ing, they say). Before the war, they made frequent trips to Stowe, Vt., and the Poconos, but now with two grown-up daughters, they find little time for sports. Here in Washington, their ski clothes hang limp and useless year after year. If they were in Oslo, it would be but a few minutes' ride by trolley to the ski slopes. The Ambassador likes to ski in Norway, dance in Washington.

Although they have an unusually full social calendar, the Dean of the Corps and his wife spend quite a few evenings dining at home with their two daughters. Even when Marjorie is in the midst of her debut this winter, her mother will set aside several evenings just for the family.

ORT Finds Havens for Jewish DPs

By Nicha Souré

A GROUP of 16 women, collectively possessing a knowledge of eight languages, has been the stepping stone to an American future in the lives of countless Jewish displaced persons.

These women, members of Women's American ORT, are tackling the Washington chapter's project of being the official placement bureau for refugees.

Working in pairs, one as interpreter and the other as placement worker, the ORT members find out former occupations and abilities of the new arrivals in Washington. If a man says that he has been a baker, the ORT members start with the classified section of the telephone book. By making perhaps scores of calls they can locate a local bakery that needs another skilled baker.

Praised by Director

THIS latest project of ORT has prompted George Pickser, executive director of the Jewish Social Service Agency, to state that "the operation of Women's American ORT has been instrumental in saving the refugee program of the Jewish Social Service Agency several thousands of dollars a year."

"Because of the enthusiasm and efficient efforts of this group to find employment for refugees newly arrived, this part of the agency's resettlement program is no longer a problem. At the present moment, this agency feels that any newcomer who arrives in this country and comes to this community can be assimilated through ORT in the economic life of the community within a short period of time."

By putting trained hands to work, ORT has placed nurses, dental technicians, pharmacists, butchers, dressmakers and plumbers.

However, ORT is not a local organization. There are chapters in 26 countries helping to integrate both displaced peoples and untrained persons in whatever community they find themselves. The philosophy of the group is "by training, or retraining where necessary, people in a trade or skill which is most necessary to the productive life of the community, ORT hopes to integrate them economically." Doing this is ORT's network of vocational schools, guidance clinics, cooperative farms and employment bureaus.

Operating 70 Years

FOR over 70 years ORT has been working toward the goal of integrating Jewish people economically through intensifying Jewish manual labor, raising the standards of workmanship and encouraging the Jewish peoples in agricultural vocations.

Last year, through the allocation of the joint distribution committee of the United Jewish Appeal, ORT trained 43,000 people in 190 ORT installations through the presentation of 1100 different courses. Schools are conducted for the young, the mentally disturbed children, tubercular patients and for the veterans.

The Washington Region is one of 11 ORT regions throughout the country. It is composed of five chapters in Washington and Virginia with one in the process of becoming an independent chapter in Maryland.

The ORT overseas project is threefold. In the materials for overseas training project, members gather all supplies needed in the training of students. These collections (machines, tools, fashion magazines, old radios) are shipped to schools in Switzerland North Africa and Israel.

Act as Guardians

THE second project is guardianship whereby individual members "adopt" children being rehabilitated and send them clothing, tinned foods and candies.

Finally, in the scholarship project, ORT finds the most gifted students and sends them to the Geneva Institute for advanced studies to become teachers, writers or artists.

One member's dues of $4 will train a boy or girl in the Morocco school for one month, ORT members say and they strive to attain the Washington chapter's goal this year of 2000 members.

Smith Magic Will Delight 32 Orphans

In the audience attending the Smith College benefit performance of "Modern Magical Mysteries." to be held November 19, at Lisner Auditorium, will be 32 children of St. John's Orphanage. Mrs. W. D. MacDougall, mother of Mme. Henrik de Kauffman, wife of the Danish Ambassador and an alumna of Smith, organized a group of fairy godmothers to invite the children.

The fairy godmothers include Mme. de Kauffman, Mrs. Gordon Gray, wife of the Secretary of the Army; Mrs. Emory Scott Land, Mrs. Frederick B. Lee, Mrs. Richard H. Leigh, Mrs. Edward B. Meigs, Mrs. Albert Read and Mrs. William P. Robert.

Delights of the show will include Master Magician Warren Simms, the comic tramp juggler, "Bobo," and the ventriloquist, Arthur J. Moose, and "Jerry."

Mr. Simms has been a professional magician for 30 years, a past National President of the Society of American Magicians, and a charter member and past president of the Magicians' Guild of America. "Bobo" is a tramp of world renown, famed for his circus performances for years past and of late for his television shows. Arthur Moose, the ventriloquist, will have the usual arguments with talkative "Jerry."

Tickets may be purchased at the Willard Hotel lobby from 12 noon to 6 p. m. and by calling Republic 4049, or Mrs. Jean Hill at Hobart 8262. There will be morning, afternoon and evening performances at 10:30 a. m., 2:30 p. m. and 8:30 p. m.

Armistice Day Book Fair Slated At St. John's Church

A bright occasion on Armistice Day, November 11, will be the St. John's Church Bazaar and Book Fair to be held between 10 a. m. and 6 p. m. at the Parish House, 819 16th st., just off Lafayette Square. George Howe will be there to autograph his book, "Call it Treason," which is on the best-seller list, and there will be other attractions such as freshly baked cakes, beautiful flowers, lots of toys, and a palm-reader.

Already plans are being made to "meet at the Book Fair," for lunch or coffee on Armistice Day. Among those who are lending their support to the bazaar are Mme. G. C. S. Corea, wife of the Ambassador of Ceylon; Mrs. Wayne Chatfield Taylor, Mrs. James Lawrence Houghteling, Mrs. Clarence Aspinwall, Mrs. Miles Colean, Mrs. Leo Bonini and Mrs. Goodwin Rhett.

Renovated Candles

If your household is one that likes to burn candles not only on festive occasions, but even when there's no special celebration, you'll probably have a lot of stub-ends around. Usually we throw these away. But there's a lot of fun for the youngsters to be found in renovating candles.

Here's the system. As a candle burns down to the place where it's not usable, it should be put aside with other similar pieces. When there's quite a stack, the renovating job can begin.

Odd-shaped bottles or straight-sided tin cans can be used. The tallow of the candle ends is melted and the stub wicks taken out. Then, a piece of candle wicking or soft cotton twine is held so that it drops directly down the middle of the bottle-neck or can. The melted tallow is carefully poured into the can or bottle mold and left to harden.

If one has used a bottle, a little care is needed, for the bottle obviously must be broken before the candle can be used. If the mold has been a straight-sided can, a knife can be run around the edge and the candle tapped out.

It's fun to try to find different kinds of molds and to surprise guests with one's own homemade candles.

GUARANTEED NO SHRINKAGE

It was only an invitation to the Homecoming dance—but it put Peggy into a small frenzy. Her wonderful evening gown had faded hanging in her closet, and now she had absolutely "nothing to wear!"

As usual, Mother came to the rescue. She suggested that Peggy bring the lovely gown to "Exquisite," the Dye Work Specialist. "Exquisite" restored the original beauty of the gown. Peggy was happy. Her date was awfully glad he had that orchid tucked under his arm when she walked down the stairs radiant in her lovely gown.

Dyeing is it? Call "Exquisite!"

Joint Civilian Orientation Conference Show Smites Eyes, Ears

first followed by Secretary of the Navy Matthews, the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Lieut. Gen. Charles Foulkes, chief of the general staff of the Canadian Army and chief of the Canadian Joint Chiefs of Staff Committee; Gen. C. B. Cates of the Marines and a handsome assortment of aides.

The Canadians caused considerable pleasant comment because of their becoming red berets. Quite the dressiest of the group, however, was Secretary Matthews, who was well insulated against the Georgia chill with a beige sweater, a brown Chesterfield overcoat with velvet lapels, brown homburg hat and tortoise shell glasses. The notables lined up, Secretary Johnson saluted, then quickly placed his snapbrim hat on his chest while the tanks boomed a 19-gun salute. Secretary Matthews, somewhat out of the picture, looked to left and right, to avoid any military faux pas. Then, with Secretary Johnson, escorted by the Fort Benning commandant, Major General Withers "Pinky" Burres, the group reviewed the honor guard.

Marching behind, three abreast in four rows, came the brass. Secretary Symington, General Cates and Admiral Sherman led off followed by General Bradley, Admiral Davis, Lt. Gen. Foulkes and the lesser lights. After the guard had been inspected, four planes carrying the civilian representatives came in almost nose to tail.

Proceed in Motorcade

THE motorcade started off, two motorcycle MP's leading, with Secretary Johnson and General Burres in the van.

The infantry demonstration was held several miles from Lawson on Hook Range. The brass, civilian representatives and press and several hundred soldiers were seated in covered bleachers. The show itself, which ran the whole infantry gamut from pistols, rifles, small arms, machine guns, rifle grenades and rocket launchers, mortars, recoilless weapons, tank weapons, was run with split second efficiency, the military participants trained to precision equalled only by the rockets.

The finale of the three-hour demonstration was an ear-wrecking show rightly called "The Mad Minute" when every single instrument of destruction used by infantry and tanks went into simultaneous action firing round after round of tracer bullets, rockets, mortars, shells, grenades and phosphorous shells.

Each section or unit of the demonstration was described and broadcast over a microphone by a Fort Benning instructor. They stood in center while on either side were two demonstrators who either held up each variety of ammunition as it was mentioned or pointed with a white tipped stick to each section of the weapon as it was described by the instructor.

The actual shooting range spread to a tree-fringed horizon and was marked with numbered and lettered targets placed at various distances. The demonstration commenced with the gun used by the infantryman—a sergeant, lying prone, shooting, reloading, firing again, and hitting bullseyes at varying distances. Then a sergeant, dressed in full Arctic gear, fur-lined parkas, wrapped white canvas boots, clumsy mittens—tested a rifle made with modifications to permit firing and reloading with mittened hands.

Men Highly Trained

EVEN more outstanding than the weapons were the infantrymen and their officers. The men ran onto the field in perfect formation, turned, held up ammunition, demonstrated mechanical parts without a lost movement. The instructors who broadcast never mumbled a syllable. To make them so completely letter-perfect they train for months and from time to time have to pass inspection by what are called "murder boards" who pull every word, every syllable, every letter apart to make articulation perfect and to prevent any chance of the instructor becoming rattled.

There were two recesses during the demonstration when coffee and doughnuts were served to everyone. Admiral Sherman, who is New Hampshire-born, ruddy complexioned and friendly, was very pleased to be present. Mrs. Sherman, he said, is still in Madrid and he's hoping to get a few days at home before settling down to his new job. Secretary Johnson, sunburned and amiable, talked with General Bradley. Photographer Jackie Martin snapping them, greeted the General. "So you know General Bradley," remarked Johnson. "He's my hero," said Jackie. "He's mine too," replied the secretary.

Later, after a brief luncheon at the Fort Benning Officers Club, Secretary Johnson met the press informally, and was badgered politely by the lady reporters. Asked about civilian participation in the orientation conferences he stated that the late Secretary Forrestal had inaugurated the plan a year ago. It's impossible for the Secretary of Defense's office to get to all the American people and these carefully selected representatives are in contact with innumerable thousands all over the country.

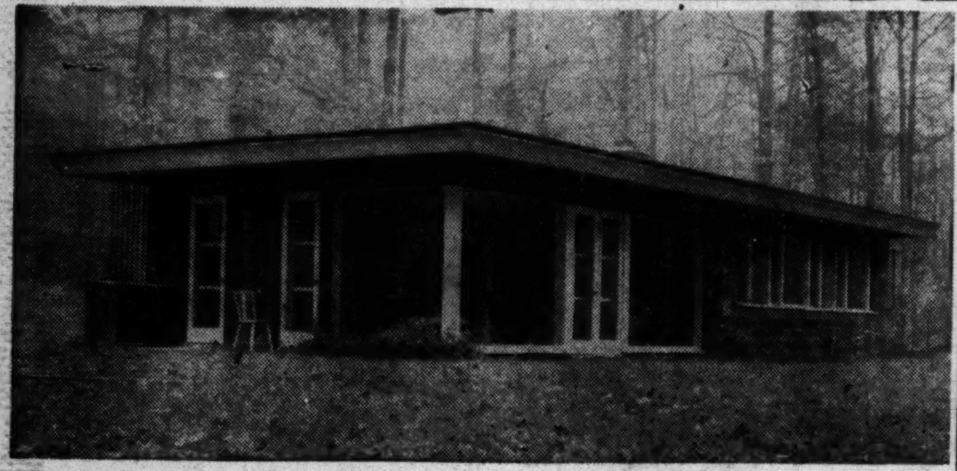
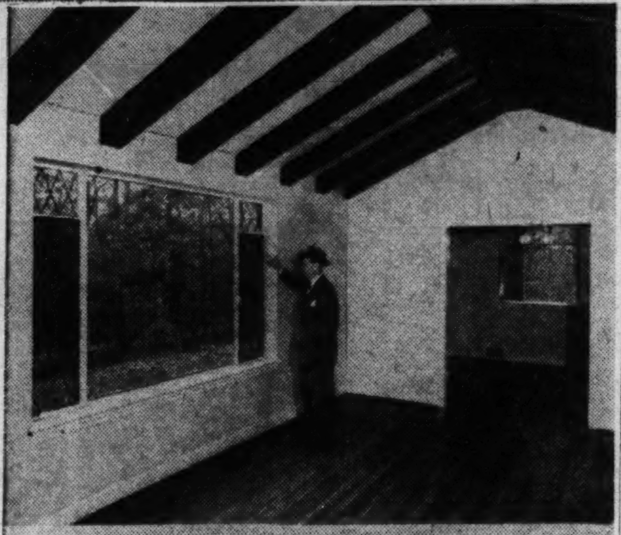
Potomac Area Lures Station Wagon Set

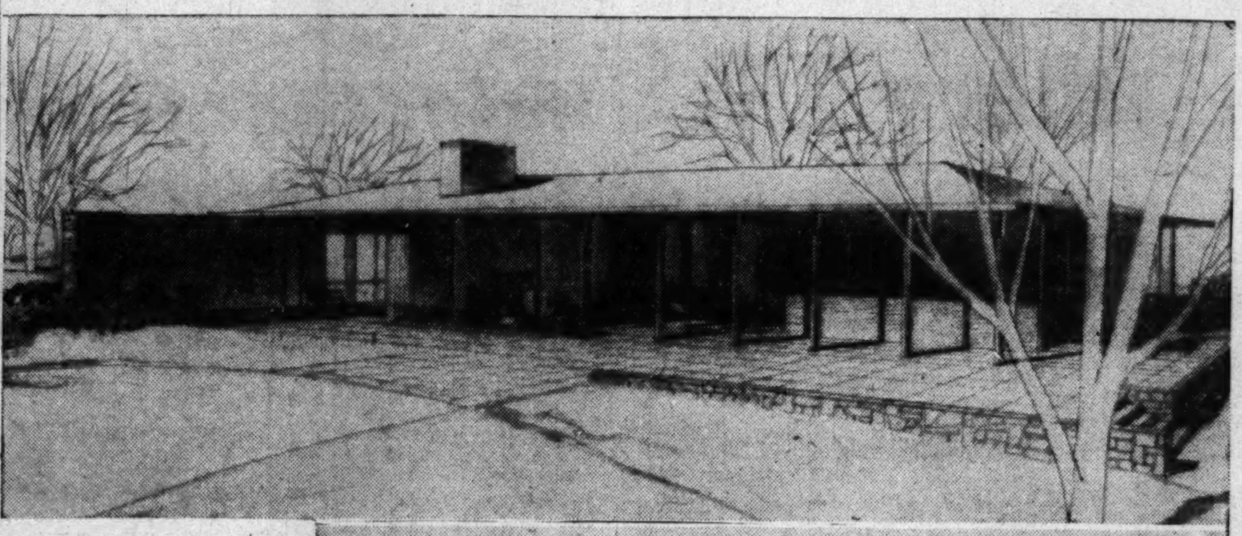


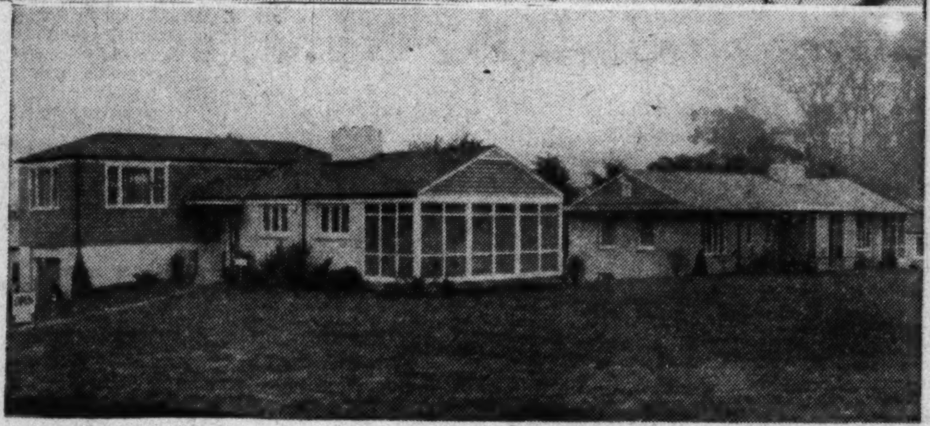
Bob Burchette, The Washington Post

FRONT of this house faces the back of the lot—not the street. And the owners, Mr. and Mrs. Kent Yoke, think their new modern rambler is just swell. It's located at 9030 Bradley blvd., has 2 bedrooms and a dressing room in the 20 by 53 foot floor area designed by David Yerkes

MR. R. D. MILLER also contracted for the construction of his own home, shown here. The large brick and stone rambler has 2-bedroom and study-den, was designed by Miller, is located on an acre lot at 8401 Bradley blvd. Interior view at right shows Miller enjoying the scene from his picture window in the living room. He estimates house would cost $36,000 to reproduce.







ABOVE, Gordon H. Sears and family like glass. Their new home nearing completion on Burning Tree rd., about two blocks off Bradley blvd., uses about 75 per cent glass in the wall areas! Sears has acted as his own contractor in erecting the contemporary residence designed by Charles M. Goodman Associates. Right, not all housing in the Bethesda-Potomac area is custom construction. Builders such as Paul Frizzell are developing attractive housing throughout the built-up areas, which have sewer and water. These two homes are in Frizzell's Whitehall subdivision, on Bradley blvd., Md.

Sales Activity Picks Up, With Prices High

By Conrad P. Harness

NEWEST refuge of the man with a few bucks who dislikes both the close confinement of city life, or spaciousness of a farm, is the nearby Potomac Hunt section of Montgomery County, Md.

In the area off both Bradley blvd. and River rd., from Goldsboro rd. westward past Falls road to Glen Hills, the "suburbanite" is in his glory. He can buy a two-acre plot on a main highway, keep a horse, be within a stone's throw of several top golf and country clubs, and still get to 14th and F sts. in 30 minutes.

What's more, the suburbanite can satisfy his urge to give his diggings an official title—like Dunmovin or Dunrovin, Cropmist, Black Oakes, Cedar Farm, Acres and Pains, Road's End, Lone Pine or Mortgage Manor. You see such signs on main highways all through the hunt section.

Land isn't cheap—hasn't been for over 10 years. You'll pay an average of $2000 an acre near Potomac crossroads, where River rd. and Falls rds. meet. Price tags on land get higher and higher as you drive in toward Washington, reaching $4000 to $6000 an acre in such de luxe sections as Bradley Hills Groves, Congressional Club Estates, English Village and Bradley Woods.

Land is more reasonable in the Glen Hills section, between Potomac and Rockville. Marvin Simmons, developer, is turning 900 acres of farm land into a unique subdivision which will boast one half million dollars in roads alone. A large acreage has been reserved for a golf and country clug. Two $30,000 ramblers are to to be started at Glen Hills this week. From 1 to 10-acre sites are available at $800 to $5000, Simmons said.

Says Apartments Started Will Meet Demand

FHA Slams Brakes On Luxury Rentals

THE Federal Housing Administration has slammed on the brakes here as far as high-priced rental housing is concerned. If anybody wants to build an elevator or garden type apartment and charge "luxury" rents of from $85 and up—they'll do it without FHA's help.

Amount of large-scale rental housing built here since the war without FHA mortgage insurance wouldn't be enough to house the annual get-together of a family named Zwqjfdcvxs.

High Rent Range Out

FHA, acting under congressional authorization to back mortgages made by lending institutions to apartment builders, has stimulated the vast majority of all postwar rental construction all over the United States. Thus, Uncle Sam has taken the financial risk in order to get rental housing started. There is plenty under way to meet current and anticipated demand.

Thomas C. Barringer, director of the local FHA insuring office, said his office would approve no proposed projects to rent in the "high rental" range of from $85 per month for an efficiency apartment to a maximum of $135 for a two-bedroom unit.

But, he added, the welcome mat is out for the builder who wants to house "medium" rentals from $62.50 for a single bedroom apartment to $72.50 for two bedrooms. Doubly welcome are "low rental" propects from $45 to $55 per month.

However, said Barringer, high rentals for minority groups or for projects on military posts are still welcome. But high rentals for white occupancy are strickly verboten. There has been started, or commitments are already pending, for 8276 units in elevator units in this high rental group in the District area, and that's plenty he added.

Have Waiting List

Barringer said the occupancy survey shows 100 percent occupancy "in most every instance" and that nearly all completed apartment projects have a waiting list of moderate size.

"The availability of apartments has increased remarkably since a year ago," the report added. "The survey indicates an unusual occupancy turnover which, however, might be explained by the number of persons buying their own homes in order to get better or larger accommodations."

A survey of FHA rental units under construction now in this area, according to Barringer, shows 23,662 actually under way, with another 3245 to be started within six months.

This total of 26,907 rental units were said to be distrributed as follows: Alexandria, 3117; Arlington County, 1498; Fairfax County, 3529; Montgomery County, 1312; Prince Georges County, 7552; D. C. Northeast, 739; D. C. Northwest, 6110; and D. C. Southeast, 3020. In addition, there are projects with 2535 proposed units with applications on file waiting for approval.

Winter's Coming!

Frozen water pipes can be thawed by wrapping them in cloths which then are saturated with hot water. Blow-torches are dangerous in inexperienced hands.

Expect Record Housing Year

New York, Nov. 5.—More homes are being built this year than ever before, according to a survey by Business Week.

The magazine says 950,000 houses are expected to be built this year, giving a lift to materials suppliers, furniture and appliance industries. The previous all-time high, 937,000, was reached in 1925.

In spite of mild weather, house-building got off to a slow start this year. Month by month, 1949 trailed 1948 all the way through May. Then, in June, the month when housing starts turned down in 1948, the figure for this year hit its peak. And it has kept above 1948 ever since.

The article says that even a pessimistic estimate for October, November and December would put this year's total even with 1948's high of 931,100 starts. Realistically, chances are good that this year's total may hit 950,000 starts, beating the 25-year high set in 1925.

Crestwood to Build 19 Arlington Homes

Crestwood Construction Corp. will launch a 19-home building program in the 500 block of N. Oxford st., Arlington, according to a building permit just granted.

Dwellings will be two story and basement, brick, with a 28 by 24 foot floor area.

Capitol Roof Gets Foamglas

Over an acre of Foamglas will insulate the new roof over the Senate and House sections of the Capitol, reports the Pittsburgh Corning Corp.

Overhauling of the Capitol roof was begun in July and is scheduled to be completed by the end of this year. Twelve by eighteen inch blocks of Foamglas insulation, composed of millions of tiny glass cells filled with still air, 2 inches thick, will be placed over the entire area.

The Consolidated Engineering Co., Inc., of Washington, is general contractor of the Capitol remodeling program, estimated to cost nearly five million dollars. The new Capitol roof will replace the one which has protected the Nation's lawmakers since before the Civil War.

Less Glare in U. N.

Heat-absorbing glass used in the U. N. Secretariat building screens out 34 percent of the infra-red rays and materially reduces glare.

Construction Contracts Up 25 Percent

New York, Nov. 5 (AP).—Engineering construction contracts awarded this week rose to $169,933,000, Engineering News-Record reports.

The engineering construction weekly said this was a 25 percent gain over last week's $135,843,000 and 55 percent above the $109,319,000 for the corresponding week of last year.

It brought heavy construction contract awards to $6,894,551,000 for the year to date, an increase of 17 percent over the corresponding 1948 date.

Private construction contracts for the week amounted to $102,827,000, or 41 percent above last week's $72,662,000 and 96 percent over the $52,328,000 total in the like 1948 week. The biggest private award was for a $51,800,000 expansion of the Northern Natural Gas Co.'s pipeline facilities in Nebraska, Kansas, Iowa, Minnesota and South Dakota.

Sales Up in Potomac Hunt Area

HERE and there, of course, are individual sales of land at lower prices. One family interviewed said they paid $3000 for 2 acres on Bradley blvd., near Bethesda Country Club.

Best judges of realty values are realtors and builders. The Bradley blvd.-Potomac area must be a humdinger—one developer has sold properties there to 14 builders, 5 architects and 4 lawyers employed by realty title companies!

R. Bates Warren, who invested in Potomac properties as far back as 1925, says sales activity in the area is picking up considerably. With building materials in plentiful supply once more, lot owners can have homes erected with ease—if they have the wherewithal.

The nearby National Institute of Health, on Rockville Pike, is expected to employ up to 4500 persons within the next few years, adding sales impetus to the area.

Samuel Bogley, another prominent Bethesda developer, reported growing interest by potential land buyers in the area around Potomac, with land available at $2000 an acre, more or less, according to location.

He said the Potomac crossroads were 14 miles, or 30 minutes to the White House via River rd., Goldsboro rd. and Massachusetts ave. extended. Potomac Transit Lines, Inc., operate bus transportation to Potomac.

The entire area has no low-cost home subdivisions, as do other portions of Montgomery County. Bogley said the community is "rounding out as one for moderate to high incomes, with low incomes attracted to the Kensington and Viers Mills rd. sections where land is cheaper and sewer and water available."

No Sewer Lines

HOMES in the Potomac section use septic tanks and well water in nearly every case, since public utilities stop at Bradmoor subdivision, near Wilson lane and Bradley blvd.

A tour of the countryside reveals peaceful, rolling, wooded hills, with green grass and plenty of wild flowers. The setting is the realtor's best sales aid. At one point, a quiet section off Falls rd., this reporter had to stop his car to permit a bevy of guinea hens to cross the road.

Homes built since the war range in price from $20,000 and up, although here and there are attractive $12,000 to $18,000 residences. Several homes have been erected by owners acting as their own general contractors and subletting work to subcontractors.

The operative builder has been sticking to the close-in Bradley blvd. section, where utilities are available. Developments there include Bradmoor, Greenwich Forest, Lybrook, Whitehall, Whitehall Manor and Hillmead, with homes from $17,000 up.

No Corner Groceries

THE home seeker runs into a different country club at every turning. There's Congressional, Bethesda, Burning Tree, Bannockburn and Kenwood, all off River rd. or Bradley blvd. The Potomac Hunt Club has a clubhouse and kennels on Glen rd. The 65 members enjoy a hunt twice a week.

The absence of major commercial installations in the large area probably serves as a major attraction to home owners wishing to avoid vast shopping centers.

One small shopping center, newly completed at the Potomac crossroads, is attracting a steady clientele. Buildings are of Williamsburg Colonial architecture. Two stores and a gas station, first units of a proposed 9-unit shopping center, are open, with plenty of parking space available to suburban shoppers.

Avoid Boiling to Prevent Rusty Water

Rusty hot water can be prevented by holding the temperature of the water in the storage tank below the boiling point of 212 degrees.

In most plumbing systems with galvanized iron pipes or hot water tanks, there is always some rust. It will remain on the sides of the tank and pipes unless the water boils. When the water boils, the rust is loosened and carried to the faucets.

In non-rusting types of plumbing, iron in the water is often deposited on the sides of pipes and tank where it will remain unless disturbed by boiling water.

Holding water temperatures below the boiling point is also a safety measure to avoid scalding the hands.

Increase in Dixie Industry Laid to Southern Business

BALTIMORE, Nov. 5 (AP).—The accelerating increase of new industry in the South is due very little to the invasion of Northern firms. Instead, it is because Southern industry itself is expanding and relocating, the Manufacturers Record reported today.

The Record cited a six-month survey it has conducted among about 900 firms who had announced plans to build, expand or relocate in the South.

Of the 92 percent answering the questionnaires, the business magazine said, 83 percent reported their firms previously had operated the plants in the South.

"It would appear that Southern business is responsible for a greater portion of Southern industrial growth than it is given credit for," the Record said.

"Admittedly, outside capital is welcome and necessary, but Southern business is financing itself today to a far greater extent than is commonly realized."

The magazine also gave part credit for the rejuggling of Southern industry within its borders to the vigorous drive by the various regions to attract new industry.

"The Southern businessman, like his neighbors to the North and West, is on the receiving end of the vigorous advertising campaigns being conducted by the industrial development groups in Southern cities," the Record said.

"He, unlike his neighbors to the North and West, knows the present advantages of this Southern market through intimate association."

Chalking Is Normal on Outside Surfaces

It is usual for paint used on outside surfaces to wear off by a process called "chalking." Surface oils are destroyed by light, heat and moisture. Loose particles appear. This is normal paint wear and is not, in itself, a sign of poor paint or poor workmanship. Before recoating a heavily chalked surface, all chalk should be removed by scrubbing with water or by brushing with a stiff brush.

Local Building Volume Up 46% Over Last Year

Contracts awarded for building and engineering works in the Washington metropolitan area totaled $259,983,000 in the first three quarters of this year, a gain of 46 per cent over the same period of last year, reports the F. W. Dodge Corp., a fact-finding organization for the construction industry.

Residential projects indicated a contract volume in the first nine months of $148,652,000 a gain of 51 percent over last year.

Awards for the District of Columbia alone for the first three quarters amounted to $99,207,000, a gain of 72 percent over the same period of 1948.

Residential contracts amounted to $34,731,000, up 125 percent over last year.

Mansion Rent Returns Drop In Hollywood

By Aline Mosby

HOLLYWOOD, Nov. 5 (U.P.).—The ladies of the town's swankiest mansions are losing business now that the film studios are making movies overseas. Hollywood's not renting so many of their front porches for movie scenes.

Instead of dishing out $150 to $350 a day to get Mrs. Moneybags' English-style estate in a picture, the studios are scouting around for the real thing.

The clearing house for mansion renting is the Film Location Bureau of the Hollywood Assistance League, a charity group. The league gets part of the studio fee for its day nursery and teen-agers' clubs and the owner gets the rest, usually given to charity, too.

But lately the league's budget is wearing thin.

"The last year has already been hard on us," says the attractive bureau manager, Mrs. Lee Turner. "We don't see why they go overseas. I can duplicate any foreign spot right here."

Italy in Hollywood

ONCE SHE FOUND a terrace of a mansion that matched the terrace of a Cairo hotel. She furnishes a huge estate near Santa Anita to the "Tarzan" people. She found "foreign" spots in Hollywood for the Crosby-Hope "Road" series and "Objective Burma," too.

"Why all those movies made in Italy? We have Italian villas right here," she says. "Also English manor houses and French farmhouses."

Sometimes she gets business out of foreign-made movies, anyway. The "Man on the Eiffel Tower" company came back from Paris for scenes in "French" gardens here. The "Under Capricorn" unit from England shuttled to Hollywood for outdoor "Australian" scenes, too.

Society started renting mansions to the movies 24 years ago when Director Cecil B. DeMille asked league founder Mrs. Hancock Banning to rent her Wilmington home for a scene in "Topsy and Eva." She got the idea of starting the service for her charity.

"When sound came in we had to revise our lists," says Mrs. Turner, who has headed the bureau for 22 years. "We couldn't use homes near trolley lines, airports or busy streets."

"Economy Size" Mansions

NOW she has more than 15,000 estates, stables, golf courses and churches on her list. She huddles with studio art directors and directors to "cast" the mansions. Then she goes along the day of the scene to be sure prize camellias aren't ground under some filmster's custom-made heel.

Lately some studios ask for medium-sized houses, having decided not everybody in the movies should live in castles. Mrs. Turner cast a "small house with warmth" for an outdoor shot in a film about paraplegics, "The Men."

Her hardest job, she says, was getting the owner of one estate to let a helicopter land on his front lawn for "It Happened One Night."

Flame May Burst Frozen Water Pipe

In thawing frozen water pipes, a steady flame like that of a blowtorch in one spot is likely to burst the pipe. Burlap wrapped around the pipe and repeatedly soaked with boiling water will thaw the ice without danger.

If a pipe has already burst, the water supply should be shut off, all faucets opened and a plumber called.

Painted Furniture Holds Popularity

Painted furniture is no new fad. Throughout furniture history it has been prominent and many of the most unusual and artistic pieces have been in color. There were many examples of beautiful painted pieces at the time when French furniture was at its best, in the most flourishing period of the Renaissance in Italy and even as far back as the days of the Pharaohs in Egypt.

Shelves Make Odd-Size Wall Spaces Useful

When an odd wall space between two doorways or in a wall offset beside a chimney is too small for furniture to look well there, the space can be made useful by building shelves.

Extend open shelves from a point about 30 inches above the floor to the ceiling for books and bric-a-brac, with a closed cabinet below for home movie equipment or other articles.

In planning the shelves, space some 13 or 14 inches apart for tall books like encyclopedias, with others 10 or 11 inches apart for average books. Plan the space in the cabinet and arrange the shelves to fit the principal articles to be stored there.

Will Builders Slash Prices This Winter?

(Do you have a housing question you would like answered by local experts? The Washington Post will pay $2 for each question used in this feature. All questions become the property of The Washington Post and none can be returned. Send entries to: Real Estate Editor, The Washington Post, Washington 4, D. C.)

THE QUESTION: Will builders lower price tags on new, unsold homes in order to sell them before winter sets in?

THE ANSWERS:

CURTIS E. MARTIN, Alexandria broker: "I don't think so. Homes are selling too fast. This office just sold 27 houses from one Washington Post advertisement. We're planning another sales campaign on some 31 three-bedroom houses to sell for under $10,000. We'll sell them in less than 30 days, too. Builders are giving more value for the money these days and sales are holding up well."

TOM KEY, with Philip B. Key Realty Co., Silver Spring, Md.: We have one builder who is in that frame of mind right now. He will probably lop off $500 from his $14,500 price. But that's strictly an isolated case. There'll be no wholesale, bargain basement housing available this winter. Sales have been good the last four months, and prices have dropped enough in the last 1½ years to take care of that group of buyers who waited for lower prices before they would buy."

HOWARD HUMPHRIES, with the office of R. A. Humphries: "There is no sign that builders will reduce prices to get rid of homes before winter—at least not the builders we represent. There was a time when financing was tougher than it is today and not many builders could afford to keep up the high monthly payments of new homes they were trying to sell. But conditions are more stabilized today and I foresee no price drops in either new or old housing before winter. There are some older type homes being taken in as trades on new homes, however. In the higher priced brackets, say $34,500, a builder might accept an offer of around $32,000. But there's no real big price drop in sight as far as I'm concerned."

JAMES L. DIXON, District realtor: "Prices have leveled off and show no signs of going down. If they go any place, it will be up. There is no evidence of builders trying to cut prices to move houses in a hurry. Business in this office is good, response to ads is better than it has been for sometime."

TONY DENNIS, sales manager for Pomponio Realty, Inc., Arlington: "Homes can be readily sold now if they are priced right and have decent financing. Demand is slow for homes costing over $25,000, but there is some demand. Financing has eased on small homes, which means that the veteran can step in and buy with a small down payment. Under those conditions, builders will not cut prices."

W. L. LEBLING, Bethesda realtor: "Construction costs have advanced a little in the last 45 days and it would be awfully hard for a builder to cut prices now. Where the builder is well financed, there will be no break in price. People are more confident these days. They don't think the bottom is going to fall out of the market. If a house is priced fairly, it can be sold."

CLARENCE W. DODGE, Jr., with Weaver Bros.: "Buyers are showing a great interest in the $11,500 home. This office sold 15 out of 16 in one development in a very short period. Availability of good financing allows for a $500 down payment and reasonable monthly payments appeals to the mass market. Some orders have been taken now to duplicate the house next spring, but the builder is afraid that construction costs will rise in the meantime. Steel products, lumber and wage rates show signs of rising."

4 Silver Spring Units Set

Plans were revealed last week for four dwellings to be erected on Crestmoor dr., Silver Spring, by Suburban Builders, Inc. Units will be one story and part basement, of brick construction, with a 33 by 29 foot floor area.

Shelves Make Odd-Size Wall Spaces Useful

When an odd wall space between two doorways or in a wall offset beside a chimney is too small for furniture to look well there, the space can be made useful by building shelves.

Extend open shelves from a point about 30 inches above the floor to the ceiling for books and bric-a-brac, with a closed cabinet below for home movie equipment or other articles.

In planning the shelves, space some 13 or 14 inches apart for tall books like encyclopedias, with others 10 or 11 inches apart for average books. Plan the space in the cabinet and arrange the shelves to fit the principal articles to be stored there.

Will Builders Slash Prices This Winter?

(Do you have a housing question you would like answered by local experts? The Washington Post will pay $2 for each question used in this feature. All questions become the property of The Washington Post and none can be returned. Send entries to: Real Estate Editor, The Washington Post, Washington 4, D. C.)

THE QUESTION: Will builders lower price tags on new, unsold homes in order to sell them before winter sets in?

THE ANSWERS:

CURTIS E. MARTIN, Alexandria broker: "I don't think so. Homes are selling too fast. This office just sold 27 houses from one Washington Post advertisement. We're planning another sales campaign on some 31 three-bedroom houses to sell for under $10,000. We'll sell them in less than 30 days, too. Builders are giving more value for the money these days and sales are holding up well."

TOM KEY, with Philip B. Key Realty Co., Silver Spring, Md.: We have one builder who is in that frame of mind right now. He will probably lop off $500 from his $14,500 price. But that's strictly an isolated case. There'll be no wholesale, bargain basement housing available this winter. Sales have been good the last four months, and prices have dropped enough in the last 1½ years to take care of that group of buyers who waited for lower prices before they would buy."

HOWARD HUMPHRIES, with the office of R. A. Humphries: "There is no sign that builders will reduce prices to get rid of homes before winter—at least not the builders we represent. There was a time when financing was tougher than it is today and not many builders could afford to keep up the high monthly payments of new homes they were trying to sell. But conditions are more stabilized today and I foresee no price drops in either new or old housing before winter. There are some older type homes being taken in as trades on new homes, however. In the higher priced brackets, say $34,500, a builder might accept an offer of around $32,000. But there's no real big price drop in sight as far as I'm concerned."

JAMES L. DIXON, District realtor: "Prices have leveled off and show no signs of going down. If they go any place, it will be up. There is no evidence of builders trying to cut prices to move houses in a hurry. Business in this office is good, response to ads is better than it has been for sometime."

TONY DENNIS, sales manager for Pomponio Realty, Inc., Arlington: "Homes can be readily sold now if they are priced right and have decent financing. Demand is slow for homes costing over $25,000, but there is some demand. Financing has eased on small homes, which means that the veteran can step in and buy with a small down payment. Under those conditions, builders will not cut prices."

W. L. LEBLING, Bethesda realtor: "Construction costs have advanced a little in the last 45 days and it would be awfully hard for a builder to cut prices now. Where the builder is well financed, there will be no break in price. People are more confident these days. They don't think the bottom is going to fall out of the market. New Bungalows Planned For N. Arlington

Crestwood Construction Corp. has announced plans for nine homes to be built this fall in the 6800 block of 29th st. N., Arlington, Va. Units will be large bungalows, of brick, with a 46-by-26-foot floor area.

of Modern Design

Experts Say Bungalow Is Home of '60

A PREVIEW of the next decade of home design reveals a strong trend toward modern, contemporary architecture, with less emphasis on conventional, boxy, two-story homes, reports Practical Builder magazine.

Homes designed by leading architects from all over the country are featured in the current issue. Here are important trends outlined for the "House of 1950-60":

Better orientation of house to lot to provide comfort, privacy and beauty, with all use made of prevailing winds and sunlight.

Built-in storage and furniture to conserve floor space and give additional storage areas for household items.

Low-pitched roofs—used successfully for years in stores, schools and other structures.

Some architects favor smaller bedrooms, giving additional space to the "living" area.

Open planning makes rooms flow together with minimum of walls, obtaining a deceptive expanse in a relatively small floor area. The separate dining room appears to be a thing of the past, except in the expensive, luxury house. Living and dining space have been combined to achieve greater flexibility of space.

Leading architects represented in the Practical Builder issue are: Raymond A. Fisher, Pittsburgh, Pa.; David B. Runnells, Kansas City, Mo.; Edmund J. Schrang, Milwaukee, Wis.; Richard B. Pollman, East Detroit, Mich.; Henry L. Kamphoefner, Raleigh, N. C.

Rudolph A. Matern, Jamaica, Long Island, N. Y.; Richard J. Neutra, Los Angeles, Calif.; Raymond Viner Hall, Port Allegany, Pa.; George Fred Keck, Chicago; Donn Emmons, San Francisco; William H. Scheick, Washington, D. C., and Alvin M. Hoffberg, Chicago.

It was pointed out by the editors that new trends are nearly always first evident in higher priced items, be it autos, clothing or a new house. Many of the pictured homes qualify as large in size and pretentious in decoration, but all contain numerous ideas that can be adapted by builders operating in lower priced fields.

Old-time building materials are suggested in new combinations producing structural materials that require no further finish to give beauty and utility. Natural brick walls are often used on the inside wall where brick also occurs on the twin outside wall.

Some of the designs are a compromise between conventional and contemporary designs. Varied roof lines, hand-split rustic-appearing shingles, native tone and ornamental ironwork, all signs of the contemporary house, are blended with the "modern" touch of brick and glass, foreground planting boxes and smart designs. Glass walls, an open porch or stone patio and other architectural attractions are used to integrate the house to the ground.

Kitchens still remain one of the most important parts of the "house of the next decade." Richard B. Pollman of East Detroit, Mich., is in favor of a kitchen-laundry, set up as the "work center" and focal point of the postwar home.

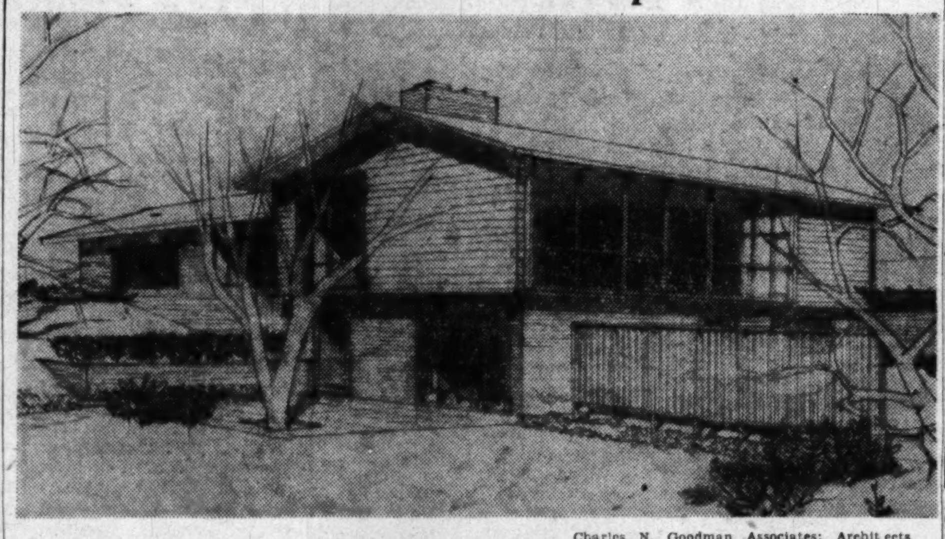
"Cabinets and walls are of natural wood—for minimum upkeep," Pollman points out. "The automatic laundry has additional space for sewing and mending. Between the refrigerator and stove is a large work counter with pass-through to the dining room.

"An island sink cabinet and snack bar has open shelves above for partial separation from the "activities" room nearby. On each side of and over the home freezer are storage cabinets for pots, pans, canned or dryed foods, etc. A handy planning desk and telephone center is provided."

Practical Builder editors said that architect-builder teams are producing a bountiful array of attractive and efficient homes designed to fit the living habits of modern American families.

"Planning," said the editors, "reflects understanding of America's new standard of living. It draws upon the benefits of natural surroundings and the advantage of labor-saving appliances and equipment."

One of Two Exhibit Houses to Open Here



Charles N. Goodman Associates: Architects

TWO new modern homes, both costing under $18,000, have been chosen for public exhibition here by the Revere Quality Home Division of Southwest Research Institute, a non-profit group promoting good design in homes under $20,000. Above home will sell for around $17,000, is located in Hollin Hills, new subdivision of modern homes off Fort Hunt rd., three miles south of Alexandria. Second display home is located in Alta Vista Terrace, Bethesda, Md., erected by Carl M. Freeman, Inc., to sell for $14,950. Both homes will open officially next Sunday morning. The Real Estate Section of The Washington Post will publish stories and pictures of both houses next Sunday

Price Rise Predicted in Yellow Pine

New York, Nov. 5 (AP).—Yellow pine prices are expected to advance $1 to $2 a thousand board feet in the near future, an industry spokesman predicts.

James L. Buckley, vice president of Georgia-Pacific Plywood & Lumber Co., said brisk home building activity, recent heavy lumber buying by the Government and inventory replacement purchases by dealers all contributed to the current strong Southern pine market.

He said the anticipated hikes would bring prices above the year's peaks established prior to the slump last June when quotations skidded to a three-year low. Since June prices have been pushing higher, and several grades of yellow pine were advanced $1 to $2 a thousand board feet only last week.

At present No. 2 common roofers 8 inches wide are selling at a maximum of $65 a thousand, f. o. b. mill, compared with $57 to $58 in June, and 8-inch widths are at $67 a thousand maximum compared with $59 to $60 in June.

Buckley's concern is one of the Nation's largest lumber companies.

FHA Backing Negro Project

Indianapolis, Ind.—Plans have been completed for construction of a 310-unit rental project in Southeast Indianapolis for Negro occupancy, at a cost of about $1,500,000, reports the Housing and Home Finance Agency. Rentals are not expected to exceed $50 a month.

Buildings will be one-story row-houses, built in L-shaped and U-shaped courts, with four units on a side. Each unit will have two bedrooms, living room, kitchen, bath and storage room, with a total floor space of 630 square feet. They will be built on concrete slabs, and will have oil space heaters recessed in the wall.

The project will be financed through an FHA-insured mortgage.

Chimney Construction

A chimney should support itself independently of the house frame. Roof, floors and walls should be framed around it, leaving 2 inches of space in which naturally non-combustible mineral wool insulation should be packed to prevent chimney heat from igniting the wood.

Two-Way Switches

A two-way electric switch at top and bottom of a flight of stairs to control hall lights is a convenience and reduces the danger of falls on dark stairways.

The safety crib guard keeps Junior from falling out of his crib and bouncing twice when he hits the floor. Available in single, double or triple bars, the unit can be attached to any type bed or crib with a railing. Available from local department stores. Made by Nursery Plastics, Inc., of New York.

PLASTICS hold the number one spot in this week's new products parade.

Monsanto Chemical Co. of St Louis unveiled more than 1000 products made from its plastics at a special New York show this week. And a goodly portion of them were brand new gadgets.

The Monsanto show had such things as:

A cream remover, made by the J. A. Danielson Co. of Richmond, Calif. It is a plastic tube the size of a stubby pencil sharpened on one end with a pouring spout on the other. Jab it into a milk carton near the top. The cream pours off: Can't be used with homogenized milk.

A shoehorn comb made by Arbo Plastics Shop of Central Falls, R. I. It is a comb on one end and a shoe horn on the other.

An ash tray coaster made by Cranston Molding Co., of Cranston, R. I. It is an tray at one end and a coaster at the other.

Little Champ mouse trap by the Animal Trap Co. of America of Lititz, Penn. It is about the size of a walnut. Catches little mice.

Snap-on drawer made by Snap-On Drawer of Morrow, Ohio. The little compartmentalized drawers snap together to make racks for holding small items such as sewing materials, small mechanical parts, or nails and things.

Wallace, Davis Co. of Hamden, Conn., makes suction cups to keep shower curtains against the wall or tub. Prevents splashing water on the floor.

A combination lock that won't click has been incorporated in the Remington Rand safe files. The company says the fall of the tumblers in the combination can't be heard even with a stethoscope, thus foiling safecrackers.

A fluorescent lamp that flatters the complexion like candlelight is the work of the Duro-Test Corp. of North Bergen, N. J. The lamp subordinates green values and enhances red values, uses a double instead of a single cathode, and employes a type of phosphor powder that doesn't contain beryllium.

Md. Project Being Built By 7 Firms

Seven building firms will participate in construction of the proposed 580-unit Hillcrest Heights apartment development, in the Silver Hill area of Maryland, just over the District Line, se.

The project will have 38 separate buildings when fully completed the latter part of next year. All apartments are two-bedroom duplex units, in two-story buildings. The living, dining room and kitchen will be on the first floor, with two bedrooms and bath upstairs.

There are already over 100 units under way by Anthony Carozza. The project will be built in 15 sections. Building permits are pending on several sections. Frank Martinelli is project architect.

Cooperating builders, besides Carozza, include:

DiZebba & Sons, 25 units, 25th ave. and Colebrook dr.

Felix Marchegiani, 35 units, 25th ave. and Iverson st.

V. L. Winella, 44 units, Silver Hill.

Myron Cowell, 52 units, Iverson st., 24th and 25th aves.

M. Pomponia & Sons, contractors, Willart Corporation, owners, 172 units, 28th ave. and Keating st.

Gables Construction Co., 32 units, Silver Hill.

The project covers around 30 acres.

Heat Loss Stopped

In the average dwelling, 44.4 percent of the heat is lost through roof and walls and it is to prevent this loss that both new and old homes are insulated with mineral wool.

Reduces Fuel Bills

Day-night clock thermostats save about 10 percent of the fuel in the average house by turning down the heating plant at bedtime and turning it up in the morning, according to Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Co.

3 Homes to Be Built

Three homes, of frame and asbestos shingle exteriors, will be erected by Crestwood Properties, Inc., at the following sites: 145 S. Garfield st., 128 S. Fenwick st. and 1705 N. Quesada st., Arlington.

"Property Management" will be the main topic of discussion. Eighty to 100 brokers are expected to attend. The seminar is in cooperation with the distributive education program of the District fo Columbia public schools.

Scott R. Brewer, jr., son of the late Scott R. Brewer, head of Allied Realty Corp., 6700 Wisconsin ave., has joined the firm as vice president. Brewer has been associated with the J. Walter Thompson Advertising Co. of New York as a research analyst since 1948. He attended Leland Junior High School and Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School, garduating from Hamilton College in 1947. He and his wife, the former Carol Baffta of Missouri, now make their home in Bethesda.

The Potomac Chapter of the National Association of Housing Officials will open its fall program at 12:15 Wednesday when Nathaniel S. The F. W. Dodge Co.'s survey of 108 leading economists produced these interesting items: Asked if wages in general industry would rise during the coming year, 81 percent said wages would remain stable, with workers receiving benefits equivalent to wage increases. On the question of 1950 residential building volume, about 68 percent expect fewer dwelling units to be built next year, but 30 percent foresee an increase.

Long-range life for the housing market: Families plan to build or buy at least seven million more homes by 1953. That's the word from the Federal Reserve Board's annual survey of consumer finances . . . in the last three years, 1946 through 1948, about six million families bought or built houses for their own use. At least one million of the 2.3 million families in the 1949 market wanted new homes.

The far-reaching economical reforms demanded in the Hoover Commission report will be outlined by Emmett J. Leahy, former Hoover Task Force man, to 700 delegates and members of the National Retail Lumber Dealers Association at their annual meeting at the Fairmont Hotel, San Francisco, Calif., November 9.

Harold E. Stassen, president of the University of Pennsylvania, will be keynote speaker at ceremonies honoring Alfred P. Sloan, jr., chairman of the board of General Motors Corp., when Sloan is presented with the 1949 Industrial Award in Chicago, November 1. The presentation is a feature of the forty-second annual convention of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, November 17-22, at Hotel Stevens. Over 30 local realtors and their wives are expected to attend.

New Trees Require Winter Protection

The thousands of young trees set out this fall must be protected against winter damage.

To keep tree trunks from breaking during strong winter gales, wrap a loop of old rubber hose around the trunk just below the lower branches. Attach 3 wires to the rubber loop and draw them tightly to 3 stout wooden stakes in the ground at equal distances around the tree, making sure that no one wire bends the tree.

Burlap wrapped around tree trunks will prevent damage from rodents gnawing the bark. Heavy burdens of ice and snow should be knocked off trees and shrubbery before its weight breaks any branches.

Californian's Survey

Europe Found Lagging In Building of Homes

RESIDENTIAL construction in Europe is about 20 years behind that in the United States in methods and design, reports Carl Gellert, veteran San Francisco builder, in the October issue of The Review of the Society of Residential Appraisers.

Touring western Europe this summer, Gellert saw few individual, single-family homes. In some countries, he says, because of materials shortages or rent freezes, there is no new construction, and in others the building is confined to apartments.

Norway and Sweden were the only two countries in which the California builder found good production, with low output by labor in other countries.

In England practically 100 percent of the housing is being constructed by the government, which controls and allocates all building materials. Most building, he adds, is limited to two- and three-story, multi-family walkups, some prefabricated homes, and the repair of bomb-damaged structures.

In Ireland, says the builder, construction is by both government and private enterprise, with the government constructing many two-story, brick walkups of two to eight units per building.

These rent, he learned, for $3 to $4 per week for three substandard rooms. Prices in Ireland have almost tripled since 1939. A five-room duplex, built before the war, sold for $3000 in 1939 and for $8000 last summer. The workmanship, appointments, room layouts, and sizes were said to be inferior to American housing.

The housing shortage in Norway is not critical, Gellert observed. Government controls all materials, with multiple units constructed by private contractors for the government, which sells them. A four-room apartment sells for $2500 cash, and purchasers pay $20 a month for maintenance.

The San Francisco builder saw many large six-to-eight-story apartment houses under construction in Sweden by speculative builders using private financing. Most were of much better quality than in the other countries he visited. Prices of everything in Sweden, he found, are about the same as in the United States, except that wages are generally a little lower. Building costs are high. A de luxe four-room apartment, including kitchen and bath, rents for about $80 a month and a cheaper one for about $60.

To encourage new construction the Italian government gives builders and owners of new apartment houses 25 years' exemption on taxes, Gellert writes. All building is of multifamily apartment dwellings, which are sold to the occupants at terms of 50 percent down and the balance in five years.

In a four-story building in Italy, Mr. Gellert saw an apartment of four bedrooms, two maids' rooms, three baths, kitchen and combination living-dining room, all on one floor, which sells for $31,000, including garage, with maintenance at $100 per month. The same could be duplicated, he believes, in the United States for $25,000.

No apartments have been built in Paris since the war because of the rent freeze, according to the builder. Prices in France, due to inflation, are up 12 to 15 times or more from the prewar level, yet rents have been allowed to advance only 15 to 25 percent in the same period. Rents for working men are about $2 to $5 per month and for middle class people $4 to $8 a month. While taxes have not risen, all service charges have.

'Jacked-Up' Apple Juice Once Elected a President

By Aubrey Graves

ADAM and Eve, Aphrodite and William Henry Harrison each had their inning with the apple. Out in our rural Eden, we are just now getting in the act. The fruit is stacked and mellowing in the cellar and, come January, there'll be apple butter, jelly, pudding, pie and Apple Pan Dowdy on the table.

And later, along about the time of the last hard freeze, there'll be a certain experiment with hard cider. That is, if the revenooers over at the Treasury Department interpose no objection.

You recall, of course, the saga of Adam and Eve. Because Eve bit into a forbidden Winesap, the original lovebirds got evicted from perhaps the choicest parcel of real estate in history.

Then there was the rhubarb kicked up on Olympus. Seems that Eros picked out a golden McIntosh one day, inscribed it "To the Fairest" and pitched it into a bevy of goddesses. Because of the ensuing scramble, it was decided to fetch up a mortal from ancient Troy, Old King Priam's boy, Paris, to decide which of the heavenly babes should have permanent possession of the trophy, and the celestial equivalent of a trip to Atlantic City. Something like the yearly routine over at WWDC, when they choose Miss Washington.

Paris gave the nod to Aphrodite. Whereupon, Hera and Athena, infuriated, cooked up a devil's brew, had Paris visit Sparta, fall in love with Helen, King Menelaus' wife, and whisk her back to Troy.

That, of course, brought on the Trojan War, the massacre of the Trojans and the sacking of the city. All of this ruckus because of an apple!

Hard Cider Candidate

SOUPED-UP apple juice caused the election in 1840 of William Henry Harrison as President. One newspaper chortled that if the Hero of Tippecanoe were voted a pension, he no doubt would be satisfied to spend the rest of his life in his log cabin, drinking hard cider. Harrison's boys, the Whigs, turned this sneer into a campaign slogan.

Harrison, actually a member of one of the F. F. V. (First Families of Virginia), became the "log cabin, hard cider" candidate. Wagons loaded with log cabins and hard cider barrels paraded the streets, to the accompaniment of lusty pioneer songs.

When all the cider had been guzzled and the ballots tallied, Harrison, with 146,900 more votes than Van Buren, was sworn in as President. Hail to the conquering apple!

Enter "Johnny Appleseed"

JOHN ENDICOTT, Governor of the Massachusetts Bay Colony, brought the first apple trees to America, in 1629. Indians carried seeds from these trees into the wilderness and planted them in their villages. Other seeds were scattered over Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana by John Chapman ("Johnny Appleseed"). He was the frontier Beau Brummel who wore a coffee sack for a shirt and a saucepan for a hat.

Cider was used freely in every Colonial home, according to "The Early American House," by Mary Earle Gould. "A man was rated by the number of barrels of cider he could leave in his will . . . There was always a free barrel in the cellar for Indians and white strangers alike."

And some of it, to be sure, got converted into cider brandy. The Colonials called it "winkum." After one good swig of it, they'd Blinkem but they wouldn't Nod!

Frontier Recipes

COLONIAL applesauce was made with both sweet and sour apples, cooked with cider molasses, maple molasses or apple molasses. Apple butter was made with cored and quartered apples and cider, sweetened with sugar and cinnamon, the rule reading: "Ten gallons cider, three pecks apples cored and quartered, ten pounds sugar and five ounces of cinnamon." Slow cooking for five or six hours made a delicious syrupy paste. Straw was placed on the bottom of the kettle to keep the goo from burning.

The Washington Post's cooking editor, Lucia Brown, says these recipes are still in good repute, although she hasn't used any straw in her cooking lately.

Apple pie must have been around even before metal table tools appeared because in some museums you can see wooden pie crimpers.

Some of the old-timers pared and quartered the apples and strung them up on a needle and thread for drying, two yards to a needleful. They hung these to dry on racks, over hooks or on frames. Other pioneers put slices into racks and baskets, set them out in the sun, or suspended them from the ceiling over the heat of the fire. The dried apples ended up in pies.

Here's the Applejack!

BUT LET'S get back to winkum!

Grind up the apples (red ones) on a frosty night (cold retards fermentation). The resulting mixture is pomace. To increase its specific gravity, expose it to the air for 24 hours. If the liquor looks bright and the air bubbles have ceased, skim off the surface crust and drain the clear liquor into a cask.

If it remains bright and quiet, you're all set. until late winter or early in the spring. If a new scum collects, rake it off again, "as this would produce bad effects if suffered to sink."

To prevent too much fermentation, fume the cask beforehand with burning sulphur.

If sleuths over in the Treasury's alcohol unit are getting jittery about the foregoing, they needn't sick their dogs onto me. It's all spelled out, plain as day, in the Encyclopedia Americana. But at this prudent point, the instructions cease, just short of applejack.

Nature Does It

ANY country fellow can tell you the rest. Leave the fermented cider outdoors on a freezing night and you'll have a solid block of tinted ice next morning. Bore a hole in it and out comes a most delectable nectar, potent enough to jar your coonskin headpiece off.

Nature has thus attended to the distillation and the Government boys can't do a thing to you—unless you offer it for cash or barter.

So, come late winter, there's going to be some tankards full of winkum in our cellar, to comfort us, to take the fight out of passing Indians, and to brace up friends and strangers as well.

Try Some Roses

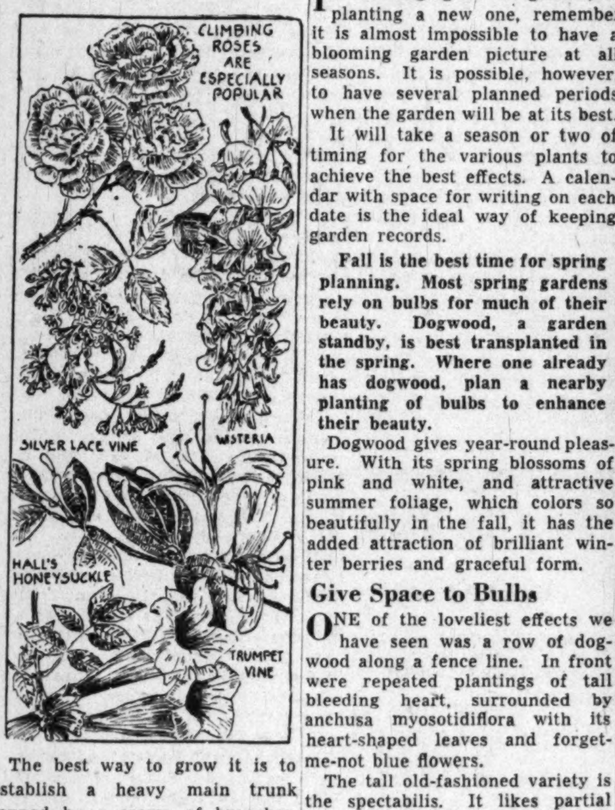
Hardy Vines, Climbers Add to Beauty of Home

HARDY vines or climbers are as essential to the beauty of the homestead as shrubs, trees, lawns and flower beds. No other plant material can take their place in the positions where they belong. Considering their size, they occupy very little space because their growth extends skyward.

The selection must take into consideration the exposure as well as the habit of the plant. Some climb by entwining their stems around supports, others hold fast by root-like organs or support themselves by tendrils. Still others merely clamber over any support they encounter.

Those which climb by twining must have supports they can encircle. And at least moderately rough surface is needed by those with root-like appendages and the tendril climbers are best served by wires or strings for basic support unless they are tied up.

The purpose of the plant also must be kept clearly in mind. Is it wanted for the flowers primarily or is shade the most important factor? Many combine both attributes. The selection also is influenced by the ultimate height and density of growth.



Climbing Roses First

CLIMBING roses are, of course, of paramount importance despite the fact that they are not true climbers. Their only means of support are their thorns, which may hook themselves over any support encountered. They should be fastened to a solid support.

A trellis erected not less than 2 feet away from a wall is a favorite means to permit fanning out the shoots to give good coverage and allow for free air circulation. Or they may be tied to porch pillars, the uprights of garden houses, strong posts, arbors or fences. Their flowers are the main attraction, but they also give good green coverage to walls and moderate shade to garden houses and porches.

Next to roses the wistaria is the most popular. Insist on grafted plants when buying because seedlings may not bloom for 10 or 20 years. The right kind of grafted plant will bloom when a mere 3 or 4 feet tall. They want a rich, deep soil with good drainage but one which does not dry out rapidly. Full sun is best, but they do fairly well in part shade.

Silver Lace Vine

THE trumpet vine or trumpet creeper is another popular subject. It is campsis radicans, though usually offered as bigonia or tecoma. Its tendency to encircle supports is limited but the long whiplike branches will find their way through a trellis or wire support and there are a limited number of aerial roots.

The best way to grow it is to establish a heavy main trunk topped by a crown of branches. All shoots above the crown are cut back annually early in the winter to stubs with two or three eyes each. It is well to keep it away from wooden buildings because it will pry up clapboards and shingles. Its brilliant orange-red flowers are very attractive to humming birds.

For exceptional vigor and showiness few climbers exceed the silver lace vine (Polygonum auberti). This bears showy, foamy sprays of white flowers during the summer and autumn. It needs sun and good soil. Under favorable conditions it will reach a height of 30 feet or more. Supports of wires are best. A single strand will suffice although the plants have no trouble supporting themselves through lattice work.

Timing Required

Space Garden Blooming Periods

By Katherine B. Pozer

IN rearranging an old garden, or planting a new one, remember it is almost impossible to have a blooming garden picture at all seasons. It is possible, however, to have several planned periods when the garden will be at its best.

It will take a season or two of timing for the various plants to achieve the best effects. A calendar with space for writing on each date is the ideal way of keeping garden records.

Fall is the best time for spring planning. Most spring gardens rely on bulbs for much of their beauty. Dogwood, a garden standby, is best transplanted in the spring. Where one already has dogwood, plan a nearby planting of bulbs to enhance their beauty.

Dogwood gives year-round pleasure. With its spring blossoms of pink and white, and attractive summer foliage, which colors so beautifully in the fall, it has the added attraction of brilliant winter berries and graceful form.

If your garden already boasts a dogwood, plan a nearby planting of bulbs to enhance their beauty

Give Space to Bulbs

ONE of the loveliest effects we have seen was a row of dogwood along a fence line. In front were repeated plantings of tall bleeding heart, surrounded by anchusa myosotidiflora with its heart-shaped leaves and forget-me-not blue flowers.

The tall old-fashioned variety is the spectabilis. It likes partial shade and can be left undisturbed once established. The anchusa likes the same growing conditions and, once these two companions are settled, they need little care.

Like many other spring plants they take a rest after blooming and must not be disturbed during hot weather when their foliage is unobtrusive or nonexistent. Plant markers are good reminders of their location.

Bulbs can be used in many ways to enhance garden beauty. Tall yellow tulips against a background of colored barberry makes a dramatic effect and tall white tulips with a background of yew are very lovely. Tall straight Darwins give the best effect, where shrubs are clipped and the effect is formal.

For fine color contrast, small tulips in orange tones add much to the spring garden most of the coloring is pastel. May flowering cottage tulips are most useful for this purpose. They come in good oranges and yellows. They are more longlived than some other varieties and are useful in border or rock garden.

Try Hyacinths

TULIPS can go into the ground until the ground freezes and it is a good idea at this time to recheck the order list and see if the budget allows for a few extra bulbs. If it can, order a few of the peony flowered. Introduced since the war, they are not widely known but have great beauty. As large as the peonies, they come in many shades.

One of the best is "Uncle Tom," a deep glossy red. Blooming at the same time as the cottage tulips they should be planted where they do not get the hot mid-day sun, for too much heat will cause their heavy heads to droop.

Hyacinths seems to be too little grown. They will stay in the gardens for years and are not disturbed by moles or field mice. Some people complain that they get smaller. They do. Sometimes they seem even lovelier in their more delicate form and always retain their fine color and fragrance.

Excellent use can be made of deep shades such as the dark blue "Duke of Windsor," planted near forsythia, or the dark carmine "Victoire," near pale shades of moss phlox.

Try new combinations with an eye on the calendar. For instance, a clump of brilliant red tulips among some of the pale blooms. If the experiment is not successful, the offenders can always be cut and used for cut flowers or dug up and planted elsewhere. It all adds to gardening fun.

'Modernize' Home With Color

MODERNIZING the home need not mean major structural alterations. The spaciousness of an interior is affected as much by color as by actual architectural design.

Since floor, walls and ceiling serve as a background, color choice begins with them. Color selection depends on family tastes, the room's function and the amount of natural light it receives.

For a restful and informal room, neutral or receding colors like pastel blue, green, beige and gray produce the desired effect. For a dramatic background, strong colors with tones of red, yellow and bright blue are recommended by interior designers.

With modern open planning of rooms, color may be used effectively to mark room divisions or to accent furniture groupings. Variety and interest may be created by making one wall in a room contrast sharply with the others. The two wall colors must of course harmonize closely.

In modernizing the older home, the interior should be cleared of all clutter such as dark, heavy stair balusters, dirt-catching molding, and ugly fireplace mantels. Lightness and grace are modern earmarks.

Lighten up a dark, uninteresting room with woodwork, bookshelves and tables in natural or blond finish. Paint the exposed bricks of the fireplace the same color as the adjoining wall. Hide old-style radiators with modern covers or by painting them to match the woodwork.

Planning to Remodel? Remember These Tips

PLANNING to remodel? Cost of the lumber will be a major factor in your budget. If you do the work yourself, it will be your greatest single expenditure.

Don't buy a better grade than is needed. Knots in a board do not mean the piece is not usable. In fact, for most remodeling purposes knotty lumber, whether it is going to be painted, stained or entirely covered, will do as good a job as clear boards. And it will asve you money.

The Western Pine Association gives the following brief summary of lumber grades and uses to guide you in your selection:

All lumber is divided into three groups—yard lumber is the kind of material stocked and sold in the average retail lumber establishment; shop lumber is fabricated into window frames and sash, doors and other woodwork, furniture and many other factory products; and structural lumber is used for heavy construction such as bridges, roof trusses and large beams.

Don't Shy From Knots

THE average home planner or householder will probably be concerned only with yard lumber, as all residential material falls into this classification. Yard lumber is divided into three general classes—selects, commons and dimension.

Selects are pieces which either contain no knots or blemishes or, in the lower select grades, a minimum of defects which do not detract from a finish appearance. Grades include B and better select, C select and D select. By the remodeler, they're usually used only for clear paneling or woodwork which will be stained or finished naturally.

Commons contain knots and other refects—the size and amount depending upon the grade. Grades are No. 1 through No. 5. Knots in No. 1 and No. 2 are sound and tight and these are the grades from which nearly all knotty pine paneling is fabricated. No. 3 common contains larger and coarser defects and occasional knotholes. No. 4 has knots, knotholes and some pitch streaks, checks and other blemishes. No. 5 is the lowest standard grade of lumber but each piece is properly edged and trimmed to standard sizes.

Dimension lumber is graded for strength rather than appearance and is manufactured in 2-inch thickness and thicker. There are four grades, from No. 1 through No. 4.

Booklet Avaliable

IN remodeling, structural members such as studs, posts, headers and other weight-supporting pieces are made with dimension lumber. But most remodeling and miscellaneous small building projects around the home will employ common grades almost exclusively. For paneling and cabinet work, either painted or stained, No. 1 and No. 2 are used. For shelving, No. 3 is sufficient. For subflooring, sheathing, roof decking and other hidden nonstructural purposes, any grade above No. 3 or No. 4 is superfluous and wasteful.

Siding and exterior trim can be made from either selects or upper grade commons, regardless of whether it is to be painted or stained. To prevent bleeding of knot resins through paint, the Western Pine Association laboratory has developed a synthetic resin knot sealer which is applied over knots before painting.

The sealer is now manufactured by more than 80 paint and varnish concerns and is available at most retail lumber yards. It was formulated specifically for the three Western Pines—Idaho White Pine, Ponderosa Pine and Sugar Pine—and opens the door to marked economies for the home remodeler. Where it once was mandatory to use select lumber for exterior purposes to forestall paint failures, less expensive and more readily available common grades can now be safely employed.

Before you purchase your materials, survey your requirements and buy only the grades you need. The proper grade for the job will last as long and look as good as the highest grade of lumber manufactured. And it will be easier on your pocketbook.

For help in determining the grade you should use, the Western Pine Association, 510 Yeon Building, Portland 4, Ore., has available a series of Grade Use guides. Copies are 10 cents each. When writing, specify the species of wood you will use.

Better Safe Than Sorry

It is not a good practice to paint over wallpaper, but it can be done if the paper is not of a texture that would look strange in one color. Also, be sure that the paper does not contain colors that will "bleed" through when paint is applied.

Postoffice Floors Hit by Blasts Nearing Repair

Repair work has progressed at the new Postoffice Building so fast that activity in the damaged sections of the northern part of 7th and 8th floors may return to normal soon, an official said yesterday.

Investigators will not be able to complete their probe of the blasts and fire that rocked the upper floors Tuesday for several days, the official said.

Files, mostly of the Federal Communications Commission, lost or damaged in the mishap, were believed to be for the most part replaceable.

Driving a motor car is twice as dangerous in the country as in the city with 10.8 deatns per 100,000 vehicles miles in the country as compared with 5.3 deaths in the city.

D. C. Grinds Films of Events Here

The District government has set up a motion picture division to record for posterity and its own future use events of interest in Washington.

Carried on with funds set aside for welcoming visiting dignitaries, the program was started last January with President Truman's inauguration.

When it came time to put up stands and decorations there was a great scrambling around in the District Building to find pictures of how the big show had been staged before.

There weren't any pictures. So the city officials made movies of the event for reference in 1952.

Other happenings filmed since then include the triumphal return of the Nats from their nine-game winning streak on the road last spring, the visit of President Dutra of Brazil, and the opening of the Whitehurst Freeway. Next on the schedule is the arrival of the Shah of Iran November 16.

Also recorded in still photographs have been such events as the swearing in of Dr. Daniel L. Seckinger, District health officer, Thursday.

The movies are made on 16 mm. film by Martin Wurts of the police identification bureau, under direction of Charles Stofberg, special assistant to Commissioner John Russell Young.

Aide in Rome for Bridge Statues

Rome, Nov. 3 (AP).—An American official arrived in Rome today to make final arrangements for the casting of two pairs of equestrian group statutes for the entrances of Washington's Memorial Bridge.

The official is Harry T. Thompson, assistant superintendent of National Capital Parks at Washington. He said he will begin conferences immediately with officials of the Italian Ministry of Industry and Commerce.

New Order Amuses Tax Group Head

District Assessor Edward A. Dent's attempt to increase income tax receipts by requiring employers to file annual statements of salaries paid drew a tongue-in-cheek comment yesterday from Rufus S. Lusk.

Lusk, who is president of the Washington Taxpayers' Association, contends that, according to the order, businessmen can comply with it simply by filing a carbon copy of the W-2 form they now furnish the Federal Government—without filling out a separate paper.

In a letter to Dent, Lusk pointed out:

"It is a cardinal principle of all the producers of Government forms that whenever two forms can be made to do the work of one, there should always be two, and if possible, three.

"It is a terrible thing you have done. You have set a precedent that may result in fewer Government forms than there are now," Lusk commented.

West Berlin Asks 20 Million To Rebuild

Berlin (U.P). — West Berlin city authorities have appealed to the Allies for $20,000,000 in credits to start the gigantic task of reconstructing this bomb-shattered capital, or at least to demolish some of the most dangerous ruins.

Four years after the end of the war, there has been virtually no reconstruction work here, and 50,000 workers employed by the city during the past year hardly made a dent in the job of clearing acre after acre of rubble piles. Half of the workers now have been laid off for lack of funds.

An innocent walk through Berlin streets on a windy day still is likely to land the stroller in the hospital, or even the cemetery. A recent survey by police officials showed that during the past six months 117 persons were struck by falling masonry. Twenty-seven of them died of their injuries.

The police survey showed there are 43,245 buildings in the western sectors from which falling bricks are likely to hit pedestrians. About 10,000 other spots were listed as real danger areas, where a high wind might topple over a wall or a chimney.

Housing officials say 67,000 persons still are living in emergency quarters.

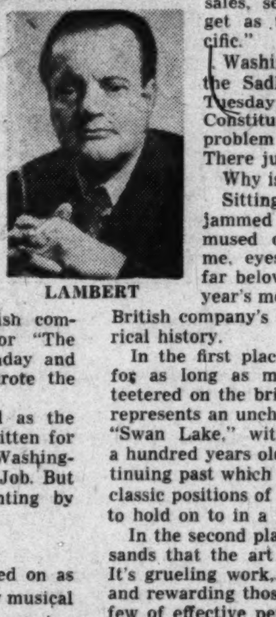
'Ballet Bowls Over Broadway'; Its Music Is England's Best

Great Gordon Score To Be Heard Here

By Paul Hume

THE SADLER'S WELLS Ballet Company is far more than a matter of dancing.

The music underlying their creations is some of the best music from England's contemporary composers. Not for nothing is the ballet being presented "in association with The Arts Council of Great Britain and the British Council."



LAMBERT

That is the council, supported by the British Government, which undertakes to pay composers, and other creative artists, to bring forth new British works of art. Once these works are created, the council sees to it that they are performed, recorded, and usually exported for American sale.

Thus several years ago America was hearing, via the finest phonograph records made in the post-war world, some of the music which will be heard in Constitution Hall Monday and Tuesday. Ralph Vaughan Williams, dean of English composers, wrote the score for "Job." For "The Rake's Progress (being danced here Monday and Tuesday nights), young Gavin Gordon wrote the music.

These two scores are widely regarded as the most striking of all the original music written for Sadler's Wells Ballet. Unfortunately, Washington's only stage will not permit us to see Job. But The Rake's Progress, based on the painting by Hogarth, will be seen and heard.

Conductor Well-Known

NOR IS THE writing of the music looked on as the least important item in the purely musical aspect of the ballet. The orchestra accompanying the dancers will be directed by Constant Lambert, himself one of England's leading composers. In recordings, compositions, transcriptions and conducting, Lambert is already known in this country.

As John Martin said in the New York Times recently, "The Sadler's Wells Ballet believes that if a ballet is worth doing, it is worth doing right." It seems simple but how often have we heard inferior playing supporting superior dancing.

Motion Picture Gave Dance a Hand Up

By Richard L. Coe

"BALLET BOWLS OVER BROADWAY" was the full-page headline in Variety two weeks ago. Although several hits in more typical Broadway genre have since arrived, two ballet companies last week racked up over $100,000 in ticket sales, seats for both being as hard to get as those for fabulous "South Pacific."

Washingtonians, in quest of seats for the Sadler's Wells Ballet Monday and Tuesday at the obviously ill-equipped Constitution Hall, have found the same problem getting tickets as New Yorkers. There just aren't any left.

Why is this?

Sitting last weekend in Manhattan's jammed Metropolitan Opera House, I mused over the excited faces around me, eyes glued on the huge old stage far below. Ballet's success has been the year's most phenomenal surprise and the British company's triumph is unique in our theatrical history.

In the first place, in an unsettled world which for as long as many of us can remember has teetered on the brink of fresh disasters, the ballet represents an unchanged tradition. The full-length "Swan Lake," with its choreography by Petipa a hundred years old, gives us a feeling for the continuing past which is unbelievably stabilizing. The classic positions of these dancers give us something to hold on to in a world that's changing.

In the second place, it has become clear to thousands that the art of dancing is no easy matter. It's grueling work, requiring years of preparation and rewarding those years with but a comparative few of effective performance. No longer is a fine male dancer viewed as effeminate; it's as rigorous work as football training. Variety points out that ballet tickets in New York have been harder to get than football seats. The combination of male and female strength and control with graceful beauty has gradually become recognized as having extraordinary mass appeal.

Movies Had a Hand

THE MOVIES have had something to do with this. The unlooked-for success of "The Red Shoes" (several of whose cast are in the Sadler's Wells company) has brought thousands a fresh appreciation of this most ancient of all the theatrical arts. Gene Kelly, too, has done a whale of a lot to make people see that dancing can be vigorous as well as beantiful. His adaptation of dancing patterns to his role of D'Artignan in "The Three Musketeers" has had its unobserved effect.

Then there is the precedent-shattering "Oklahoma!", which told, in its lovely ballet, of its heroine's thoughts far more effectively than words could have done. The musical shows which took on this pattern reintroduced the dance as a theatric art and it is those who so fondly remember Agnes De Mille's ballet who have now joined the more established fans.

Another reason for the sensation of these ballet companies is the fact that dancing, next to the strip-tease, is the most sexual of all forms of theatrical art. Its material, as Norman Marshall once pointed out, is the human body. Every moment of ballet is designed to show off this God-bestowed temple of the soul. If you've heard the cries of excited bobby-soxers greeting Frankie Sinatra—or Peter Lawford on the Capitol stage this week—you'll note they're the same as those which greet the fall of the curtain on a well-danced ballet.

Only a Suggestion

SEEING both the Sadler's Wells company and Roland Petit's Le Ballets de Paris in New York theaters is a treat Washingtonians emphatically will be missing. The absurd platform—little more than boards on carpenters' horses—which is the best this world Capital can offer, will reveal only a suggestion of the splendor of the London company. Its numberless settings can't be used. The spaciousness required by the dancers must be in your mind's eye; how they'll keep from falling into that deep orchestral pit in cold, drab Constitution Hall will be a minor miracle. Playing at the Winter Garden, the Paris company's subtle insouciance would be utterly lost in Constitution Hall, but where else can it go?

The history of the British company is long and intricate, paralleling the Old Vic acting company. For it was Lilian Baylis, director of the Old Vic Theater in Waterloo Road and the Sadler's Wells Theater, where her company also acted, who encouraged Ninette de Valois to form her dancing ensemble.

Weekly performances, with Constant Lambert conducting, grew into full-length ballet evenings and though the company suffered during the war through lack of male dancers, formation of the Covent Garden Opera Trust put the company on

Defense's Radio-TV Wing Seems Unified

By Sonia Stein

IT'S NOT likely you'll hear anybody say "Aye, aye, Sergeant," but short of that the Radio and Television Branch of the Department of Defense seems 100 percent unified, consolidated, merged and married.

In both the preparation and production of its two new air shows—one radio (Tuesdays, 10 p. m. on ABC) and one television (Sundays, 5 p. m. on NBC)—the Branch mixes olive drab, navy blue, and Marine green with a casual hand and pins wings on top.

The Tuesday night radio show, which originates from Lisner Auditorium, is called "Time for Defense." The master minds on this show are Stanley Field, a civilian; Maj. George Blackburn of the Marines and Capt. Mark D. Meranda of the Air Force.

The announcers—four, count 'em, four—are Maj. Wesley McPheron of the Army, Lieut. Cass Bielksi of the Air Force, Lieut. Jack Sorenson of the Marines and Ensign Judah Siegal of the Navy. Where any normal network show would have Ben Grauer playing all four parts, the Department of Defense comes through with the full complement, using them subtly but strategically to put over the message of unification.

The music is provided by the United States Air Force Concert Orchestra, the "Singing Sergeants" from the Air Force and an assorted crew of WAVES, WACS and WAFS and lady Marines.

The Sunday TV show, "The Armed Forces Hour," which originates from the Wardman Park Hotel studios of WNBW, is produced by Maj. Robert P. Keim of the Air Forces and Lieut. Benjamin S. Greenberg of the Navy, and uses the same musical aggregation.

Must Be Amphibious

ALL reporters assigned to pick up documentary material for either show have to be mental amphibians since a Navy man may find himself on muddy maneuvers, while an Army man is getting seasick in a submarine.

But it's the results produced by the branch, working under Charles Dillon, chief of this branch of the Office of Public Information of the Department of Defense, that's the real cause for joy.

All of the positive and attractive factors ever credited to military life are used to advantage, and one that's never been suspected is used. The unexpected delight is the official news commentary by William Frye, director of information, on the radio show.

A far cry from the "sound of brass," it's done with tongue-in-the-cheek humor, acknowledging the first week that the majority of service men eligible for early release would jump at the chance, and that the newsmen had been disappointed at the lack of fisticuffs at a conference held that day at the Pentagon. The second week Frye asked, "How would you like to sit through 16 speeches in two days?"

All hail Mr. Frye and his immunity to bureaucratic double talk.

Inspired Ideas

THE radio and TV units, each working on its own, have come up with some inspired ideas for the documentary portions of the program. The radio show opened the series with a tape recording of a paratrooper describing his jump as he made it, complete with grunt when the chute opened, and the eerie silence of space as the man descended.

The second show used material picked up at "Operation Miki" in Hawaii where one set of our troops made mock battle with another set. (Although the radio-TV branch inherited the wartime Intelligence room, it didn't inherit commensurate trust and had no idea what day would be D-Day at Hawaii and consequently no idea when to expect the recording for the show.

Next Tuesday's show will explain more about the work of "Our Private Enemy," the division of highly trained men who speak a garbled language and otherwise create confusion in the ranks of a division on maneuvers—to give it battle practice.

To Go H., W., & I.

THE TV show which opened newsily but heavily last week with what amounted to an illustrated lecture on the way the various arms apportion their budget money, intends to go high, wide and imaginative hereafter. Today's "Military M. D." will use film clips taken at military laboratories and hospitals, but it will also include "live" shots of a man in a service-designed protective suit sitting in a plexiglass tank of ice water. Next week's show on the famous "Frogmen" will include films, of course, but will also include actual demonstrations by the fin-equipped servicemen in the outdoor pool of the Wardman Park. (Babies, it's cold outside!)

At Easter time "Right Dress" will show what the well-dressed serviceman will wear. (This is another example of the advantageous use of the positive elements of military life. Women love uniforms—as the sailors who refused to give up their bell bottom trousers know so well—

Tallulah Proves She Can't Sit Still

By Hedda Hopper

HOLLYWOOD.—Tallulah Bankhead begged Leland Hayward for the lead in "The Rat Race." He explained that her volcanic personality would disrupt the character and the play. Talloo replied, "I'll show you I can keep quiet and sit perfectly still. See." She did for two minutes, then erupted like Vesuvius. Betty Fields, a quiet girl who can erupt at the right time, plays the part. . . . The Henry Wilcoxens expect their third child in June. Henry, who's been ailing, will be well enough to go to London for "Mrs. Miniver," and his wife hops along. . . . Virginia Van Upp's own daughter didn't know she was about to divorce her husband. Seems Virginia developed a high blood pressure over Spanish Writer Gina de la Torre. They've been writing "The Life of Christ" together. . . . Huntington Hartford gifted his wife with a new gold bracelet, which has a gold cage dangling from it. Inside is the cork from the first champagne bottle he opened for her. She's working with Walter Saxer on body grace and poise, and still wants an acting career. . . . Polan Banks settled the Andre de Toth and Veronica Lake lawsuit for $15,000 cash. . . . Director George Sidney's bound to get "Showboat" after the way "Annie Get Your Gun" is going on film.

WILCOXEN

SOCIAL ERROR: Bonita Granville and Jack Wrather had tea at the House of Lords in London with Lord Archibald of Woodside. They tried to explain the picture business to the Scottish nobleman, who smiled, but never let them know that he was once head of United Artists in England, and worked with the British information service in Hollywood during the war. . . . Harry and Jack Warner are in New York arranging for the sale of some of their theaters. I talked with Harry before I left. Said he, "After working 48 years, I no longer know in which direction to go. Today one is punished for being too successful. I'm hoping we'll make the right decision, but if we do, I doubt if we'll know it." . . . Joe ("Mission to Moscow") Davies wanted to take friends to "South Pacific" but couldn't get seats. So he called on Jack Warner for help. He helped 'em to four first row center seats. Cost Jack $200. . . . Arlene Dahl won't get a 10-day holiday in New York. She starts rehearsing dance steps with Fred Astaire for "Three Little Words." Arlene's ecstatic over the opportunity. She plays Eileen Percy, the wife of Songwriter Harry Ruby, and will sing and dance in the film.

LAVISH SETTING: Charles Mendl and Renee de Becker, invited Ina Claire and me to luncheon at Renee's 5th ave. apartment. It's the most beautiful one I've ever seen. She brought her art treasure over from Austria, and the paintings, of which there were eight in the drawing room, are said to be worth $250,000 apiece. Her dining room walls feature the rarest collection of Meisen and Dresden birds—in all shapes, sizes and colors—I've ever seen. Her cigarette boxes are gold encrusted in jewels, and the ashtrays are gold, too. Renee spent the war years in Hollywood, and never stopped working with the Red Cross and children's groups. New York's lucky that she settled there . . . Jennifer Jones swears she'll be back for Christmas. . . . You'd be surprised to know how many fan magazines were caught with their covers down on account of Shirley Temple. . . . Caught a dress rehearsal of "Fashions of the Times" before I left New York. It's quite a show. I saw more dyed fur coats than I'd beheld since Fannie Ward went on a dyeing binge and had all her furs colored baby pink and blue. Four special dresses by Travis Banton, Norman Norell, Christian Dior and Castillo got shouts of approval.

PANDA-MONIUM. Humphrey Bogart gave one of those pandas to Nunnally Johnson's little boy, and the other to his son, Stephen. Both kids were bored stiff with them. When he finishes "In a Lonely Place," Bogie and Lauren Bacall return to New York. They'll return to California in time for the midwinter yacht races. According to his contract, Bogie can make only two pictures a year. . . . Don't take any bets that Bill Dozier and Joan Fontaine will reconcile. Bill's not interested.

Closeup—The Harrisons

Lilli at Last Wins Equal Rank With Rex

By Tex McCrary and Jinx Falkenburg

AS HENRY VIII, Rex Harrison disposed of his wives with an ax on their necks, but Lilli Palmer used a far more original method of roping him: a boa constrictor around his neck.

"We were in competing plays in a small town in England," she says, "and there wasn't room in that town for two plays. We moved on in our separate companies, and the next week we found ourselves competing again—in Liverpool. That was how Rex and I met, and we were glaring at each other."

After the glares had softened, Lilli suggested they take a trip to a nearby country zoo, in the ruins of an old castle.

"I was particularly fond of snakes. I had gone to a coeducational school, you know, and the boys carried snakes in their pockets all the time. That was why—just for the fun of it—I happened to hang a boa constrictor around Rex's neck. He never batted an eye—quite brave, don't you think?"

It Was Explosive

THEY can claim an explosive romance: "There were several bombs involved, you see. During our courtship," Rex recalls, "and I love that word, so old-fashioned—I had an R. A. F. job some 500 feet underground. I was safe when I was at work, but when we were together, the blitz was at its worst. Our wedding day, February 19, was one of the most destructive days of the war."

A bomb near-missed their hospital when Lilli was having her baby, and later on, another bomb showered debris on its carriage. The boy, named Carey and now five and a half, was unhurt.

A Resemblance

SINCE he came to America, Rex has played kings whose domains lie at opposite ends of the earth: King Henry VIII of England (in "Anne of the Thousand Days") and King Mongkut of Siam (in "Anna and the King of Siam"). The Siamese role called for an especially careful makeup job, with slanted eyes and tight skin. Did it look real? Lilli tells a story about that:

"We were in Rome for the first time, walking through the Vatican with our hearts set on seeing Michelangelo's Sistine Chapel, when I thought I saw a photograph of Rex. We walked past, and then I stopped him.

"I said, 'There's a picture of you back there.'

"He said, 'Here? Lilli, come now . . .'

"We went back, and looked more carefully at some of the thousands of gifts sent to the Popes from all over the world. There, in the midst of them, was a large, brown photo of what we could have sworn was Rex made up as the King of Siam, sitting cross-legged with his hands folded. We looked again, and saw that it was an old daguerrotype of the real King Mongkut, one that he sent to the Pope many years ago. The resemblance was amazing."

Just as amazing is the way Lilli knows her husband's lines; she listens to him practice during rehearsal, and she saw his current play scores of times. When we asked Rex if there were any lines in this play that he would apply to his own wife, he thought a moment, and then began ruffling through the script. Lilli, with a quiet mischief, looked at the ceiling and suggested:

"How about that speech in the first act . . . 'Why do you anger me?' "

"No . . . perhaps I can find a line in a love scene . . . let me see . . . "

"In the second act, there was one . . . 'Why am I tied to this alabaster face and pursed mouth.' "

Rex looked up from the script. "That line . . . is in this play?"

"Why, certainly. I'd bet on it. And I'd collect."

He stopped ruffling the pages. With a sigh and a shrug of the shoulders, he tossed the script away.

TEX.

POSTSCRIPT: Dear Jinx: I would like to take this opportunity to put something right in my biography—it has irked me for a long time.

I am known as "Viennese," but I actually have never even been to Vienna in my whole life!

I was born of German parents in a little German town called Posen, which my parents left, while I was still a small baby, when Posen became a part of Poland after the first World War.

When I got my first film contract with Gaumont-British in London, the publicity office there decided to make me "Viennese" rather than German—that was before the Anschluss!

Their version of my biography preceded me to Hollywood, and I have never had as good a chance as this one to put my cradle where it rightfully belongs!

LILLI.

Crosby at Random

D'ya Think Your Dog Would Like the City?

By John Crosby

GOT a few random notes here on some of the dizzier recent happenings in radio and television which formally open the fall daffy season as opposed to the summer, or flagpole-sitting season. Let's assume your dog has got his entry into the Lucky Dog contest, which has been plugged these many weeks on the Juvenile Jury program. The winning pooch will be flown to New York where he will be driven around in a station wagon (one of his prizes) by a chauffeur and footman to night-clubs and other spots of interest to dogs. He (or she) will also be awarded a Hollywood swimming pool.

Allen Funt, the aggressive proprietor of the "Candid Camera" television show, recently posed as the instructor at a driving school where he carefully taught a woman student to honk her horn once to start, twice to park, three times for a U turn and, for driving on the wrong side of the street—five times. Take to the hills, men!

The other day Dorothy Kilgallen, the feminine half of the "Breakfast With Dorothy and Dick" program, complained on the air about having to wear a white band-aid on her cut finger to a party. Said it looked awful with an evening dress. The next day Johnson & Johnson sent her band-aids in bottle green, mauve and shocking pink.

OVER in London, the BBC, which once tracked down and broadcast the song of a nightingale from a London park, televised the moon from the balcony of Alexandra Palace. C. A. Lejeune, the television reviewer of the Observer of London, reported to his 384,000 readers that the moon in black and white paled easily. So he took a walk under the real, yellow moon and reviewed that instead. Gave it a rave notice.

Another London reviewer, Maurice Gorham of the Sunday Times, was less kind to American

Baer to Get Banshees' 'Lady' As Year's Top Newspaperman

THE THIRD annual award of "The Lady," presented by the Banshees Luncheon Club to the artist or writer considered the year's outstanding personage in the newspaper field, will go this year to Arthur "Bugs" Baer, the famous humorist-columnist.

Roughly corresponding to the "Oscar" award in the movie industry, "The Lady" is a silver statuette designed by Willy Pogany and has been won in previous years by Walt Disney and Chic Young, the cartoonists. It will be given to Baer on November 10 in the grand ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria, when more than 1000 leaders in the publishing field — newspapers, magazines, books and radio—will gather to pay him tribute.

The columnist, who has been preeminent in his field for more than 40 years, expressed his gratitude on learning of the award. "It's a pretty nice tribute, believe me," Baer said, "but I don't think I need any award other than the privilege I've had of working for the last 30 years in the Hearst organization."

Chief Banshee

DOUBLY famous as a writer and an after-dinner speaker, Baer does a column called "One Word Led to Another" that today is even more widely read than ever. His witticisms—the first time he saw the Grand Canyon, on his honeymoon, he said, "What a great place for old razor blades!"—have been published in many anthologies and he is one of America's most noted masters of ceremonies. Ever since the founding of the Banshees, more than a decade ago, he has acted as Chief Banshee.

Bugs Baer was born in Philadelphia in 1886, the seventh of 14 children. He quit school at 14 and went to work as a lace designer after a swift course at the School of Industrial Art, and later broke into the newspaper field as an office boy on the Philadelphia Public Ledger, then owned by Adolph Ochs.

He first began making himself known when he did sports and editorial cartoons and columns for the Washington Times, and it was while there that he began drawing weird little bugs into his cartoons regularly, giving him his nickname. He hit New York as a humorist columnist for the old New York World, and claims he baffled everybody in the office by writing his column in five minutes. "They didn't know I was rewriting my old columns from Washington," he says.

15 Million a Day

BAER went to work for the New York American in 1919 and in 1930 he went over to King Features Syndicate, which today distributes his works to an estimated audience of 15 million persons a day. Mrs. Baer is the former Louise Andrews of Lafayette, Ind., who was one of Ziegfeld's most beautiful stars in the days of the "Follies."

Baer's gags include the immortals: "Tough Town is so tough, the canary birds sing bass" and "He was so dumb they had to tear down the schoolhouse to get him out of the second grade." They were thefted as swiftly as he wrote them, and when he appeared in vaudeville once, he had to write all new material. "If I used my own," he said sadly, "the audience would have thought I was stealing it."

Club to Open 'Mr. Pim'

THE ARTS CLUB dramatic group is proud of its cast of "Mr. Pim Passes By," the A. A. Milne comedy which will open a three-night run tomorrow night in the club auditorium, 2017 I st. nw.

From Denis Connel, director of scores of plays by local groups, through the company, its players have been prominent in Washington theatricals. Walter Studdiford, in the title role, directed last year's one-act play tournament winner for the Arts Club, was an original member of the Willard Roof Players and has had roles in the professional theater.

William Bohan, a new member of the club, hails from Oklahoma City's Little Theater and has appeared here with the Mount Vernon Players.

Ruth Sadler was chosen a "Miss Television" by Ruth Crane and has appeared here with the Arts, the Theater Wing and in local night clubs as well as on the Capitol stage.

'Tom Sawyer' Slated Dec. 2

In April the Washington School of Ballet will present "The Adventures of Oz," and in May Mrs. Cowen's Children's Studios will revive "Mary Poppins."

Members of the advisory committee include Mrs. Seymour Jeselsohn, Mildred Clum, Mrs. Edwin M. Brown, Mrs. James E. Cox, Mrs. E. C. 'Metropole,' N. Y.-Bound, Starts Nov. 14

NEW YORK-BOUND, Max Cordon's first production of the new season will open a week's run at Ford's Theater, Baltimore, a week from tomorrow night.

The veteran producer's play is "Metropole," a comedy by William Walden with a setting not unlike that of the New Yorker magazine's 43d street headquarters. Gordon's "Born Yesterday" is now in its fourth New York season and his previous bannerfliers have included "My Sister Eileen," "Junior Miss," "The Doughgirls," "The Late George Apley" and "The Women."

Star of "Metropole" will be Lee Tracy, who returned to the stage last season in "The Traitor." Directing, as he often has in the past for Gordon, is George S. Kaufman, once a Washington newspaperman.

Others in the company include Edith Atwater, Arlene Francis, Reed Brown, jr., Henry Jones and Jane Seymour.

POPULAR PETE: Peter Lawford, headlining on the Capitol stage this week after scores of Hollywood films, is a young man the young girls love. He's also now on the National screen in "The Red Danube"

'Dick Whittington' Set for Nov. 26

Clare Tree Major's Children's Theater of New York will present "Dick Whittington and His Cat" on Saturday morning and afternoon, November 26, at the Virginia Theater, Alexandria.

Mrs. Major's famous band of actors is presented in the Washington area by the Children's Museum of Washington, 1607 I st. nw. This will be the second of the season's subscription plays.

Tickets are available at the Top Shop, 1607 I st., at Chequire House, 202 King st., Alexandria, and the Hobby Horse, 900 Prince st., Alexandria.

Group to Hold Custom Fete

A SERIES of festival customs of other lands will be presented Saturday in the Shoreham Hotel ballroom by the Little Theater of Alexandria under direction of Mr. and Mrs. William F. Todd.

The program is the entertainment feature of the international fete being given by the Capital division of the Women's National Farm and Garden Association. Proceeds will provide scholarships for young women in agriculture, horticulture and related fields.

Tickets and further information may be obtained from Mrs. Arthur Vennell, Woodley 9461.

More About the Ballet

a firm footing. Figuring that tickets brought revenue to the government, the government has put money in back of theater and this lively art. What might seem like governmental largesse to some is made up for in taxes.

So it is from government-subsidized ballet that America for the first time is introduced to full-length, evening-long ballet, though Washington's auditorium doesn't make this possible here. Still, considering America is getting something for the first time at this date is a curious statistic.

Base in Tradition

LES BALLETS DE PARIS, though offering a nontraditional program, including a lively "Carmen" and a deliciously funny "Soft-Boiled Egg," is based strictly on traditional ballet. Its founder, 25-year-old Roland Petit, joined the Paris Opera Ballet at 10, grew up in the tradition. The same holds for all his principals, except for Joy Williams, the only American dancer in his company. Miss Williams began in New York under George Balanchine in the American Ballet Company, went to Europe for jobs not to be found here.

The Parisians add their eyes to the traditional stances of ballet and the result is an evening of rare wit and seduction. For your next trip to New York, I heartily recommend a visit to the Winter Garden, though you should make your plans in advance.

How all this ballet-conquering of the theater's main stem affects the burning Lucia Chase would be interesting to know. As the American who has done most to form a company and keep it together, Miss Chase now needs the further support and trust of us all. For without her Ballet Theater—and Oliver Smith—American ballet would be a wilted plant with no audiences. She, too, has prepared the way for our visitors' triumphs and one hopes she will take heart from the audiences now uncovered to such a surprising degree.

For ballet companies cannot be trained in a few seasons and with limited performances. The role of the single member of the corps is as taxing as that of the principal dancer and to keep the winning team together demands further American recognition for the gallant, skilled Lucia Chase.

How's About an Opera House?

Turning to the music again, Arthur Bliss, not well enough known in this country, wrote scores for two ballets in the American repertoire of the visiting troupe. Neither Checkmate nor Miracle in the Gorbals will be viewed here. But from the recording of the latter, we know the tension and dramatic appositeness of Bliss's score. The story of the "Miracle" is concerned with the hypothetical second coming of Christ.

Bliss has taken the setting, a slum district in Glasgow, and built a successful piece blending the suggestion of squalor with a touch of the mystical. William Walton's music for "Facade," recently re-recorded in its original version, is witty, biting satire. It is widely known here through two orchestral suites played by many symphony orchestras.

It was first devised to accompany the recitation by Edith Sitwell of verses by her brother, Sacheverell. The verses are not used in the ballet but the eminently danceable music is one of the prize backgrounds for ballet.

Superb Discipline

THE EXCELLENCE of all this music, shown in its frequent performance on phonograph records, speaks highly for the purely musical element in the Sadler's Wells Company.

When one adds to this the substantial fact of such dancers as Margot Fonteyn, Moira Shearer, Beryl Grey, Michael Somes, John Field, Robert Helpmann, and a superbly disciplined company, one has not yet touched on all the essentials of the company.

The group is directed by Ninette de Valois, one of its most original choreographers. Miss de Valois is seconded by Frederick Ashton, who has the title of Principal Choreographer. Constant Lambert is Musical Director. This is a triumvirate able to achieve and maintain the kind of company we already know the Sadler's Wells to be.

One Sad Note

THE ONLY sad note in the whole thing is the absolute inadequacy of Washington's sole theater large enough to accommodate some part of the huge number anxious to see these artists. How is it possible that we continue to do nothing toward securing the house and stage we need when we all so long for a proper place for music's greatest spectacles?

Washington is a phenomenal "ballet town" even in the face of its poor facilities. What would happen if we had a great, modern music theater?

I'll tell you what would happen: Ballet companies would visit here for two or three weeks at a time as they do New York and Chicago. Opera companies could come here and a resident company might even grow and flourish. The National Symphony would have a place where it could be heard to the best advantage and where it could rehearse without fear of being displaced.

Washington might even become the cultural center it now is potentially.

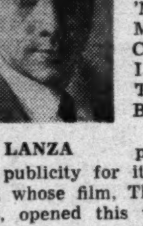
The Record Player

Lanza Disks Show Off A Fine, Resonant Tenor

THAT MIDNIGHT KISS. Mario Lanza, tenor, with orchestra. Victor 1330. $4.75.



LANZA

Lanza sings: Puccini: Che gelida Manina; Verdi: Celeste Aida; two Neapolitan folk songs; Core 'Ngrato, and Mamma Mia Che Vo' Sape I Know, and They Didn't Believe Me.

Victor is pouring out the publicity for its new tenor star, whose film, That Midnight Kiss, opened this week at the Capitol.

From the records, Lanza has a fine, resonant tenor, big enough for most Italian lyric roles. Actually it is not as large as the recording makes it sound. He sings well and easily in loud passages. Unfortunately, he sings loud almost all of the time, with little shading and no real style.

His folk songs are as monochromed as his opera arias. Someone will have to tell him someday how the recitative sections in Celeste Aida should be sung, and he has one very bad note in Core 'Ngrato. Otherwise this is a good sample of a fine voice on its way to making a fortune. It is not indicative of any future artistry. The records I received would not play automatically since each one slipped on top of the other and refused to revolve at the proper speed.

Handel: Royal Fireworks Music. Liverpool Philharmonic Orchestra, under Malcolm Sargent. Columbia 319. $3.

In Sir Hamilton Harty's transcription, this music is almost as fascinating as the better known Water Music. It lacks something of the suave lyric elegance, and never comes to the same exciting climaxes. But that is partly due to Sargent's rather placid direction. Harty's old recording is very good but this new set replaces it in modern reproduction. You should have this if you don't already.

VERDI: Rigoletto: La Donna e Mobile; also: Flotow: M'appari; Richard Tucker, tenor. Columbia 72828. $1.

Tucker is called (on Columbia's list) "probably the most outstanding tenor in the Metropolitan Opera roster of stars." That in the face of Bjoerling, Svanholm and a group of real artists, is a bit steep.

Tucker sings these worn out items with plenty of volume. If you wonder how they should be sung, check recordings by Schipa, Caruso, even Tagliavini. Are we never to hear less than loud singing again?

Bach: Program including Passacaglia and Fugue; Toccata and Fugue in D Minor; Sleepers Wake; and Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring. Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra. Columbia 846. $5.

I wish I could find something good to say about this set. Perhaps the old fact that the Philadelphia Orchestra tone is beautiful. As far as Bach goes, this set makes little difference. Bach wrote his Passacaglia for organ or two-manual keyboard instrument; his Toccata and Fugue for organ; Sleepers Wake and Jesu Joy, are from cantatas and organ writings.

They have been badly treated in the arranging, and are played in an amazing variety of ill-chosen tempos. While so much music yet waits recording, why must we get these things?

CONCERT HALL'S fourth annual list looks the best to date.

It contains rare items of old and modern times and utilizes the best artists available for each work. Not only are the great names of Bach, Handel, and Mozart represented in the list, but the music of these giants is not that found on other recordings.

Cost for the series of eight issues of 13 albums is $105, including tax.

The list for the year is:

Vivaldi: Concerto Grosso in D Major; Dvorak; Piano Quartet; Mozart: Symphonies in B Flat, and A Major; Bartok: Suite for orchestra; Haydn: Concerto in F Major for organ and orchestra; Dello Joio: Ricercare for piano and orchestra; Mendelssohn: String Quartet; 16th century harpsichord music by Cabezon, Byrd, Gibbons, Bull, Sweelinck. Martinu: Concerto for double string orchestra, piano, and tympani; Bach: Concerto for flute, harpsichord, violin, and strings; Beethoven: Trios in E Flat and G Major; Telemann: Concerto for three violins; Rossini: Quartet for woodwinds.

Alternate selections provided include: Handel; Concerto in B Flat; Schubert: Quartet in E Major; Quartet Movement in C Minor; Porter: Sonata No. 2 for violin and piano; Guarnieri: Sonata No. 2 for violin and piano; Kodaly: Soir d'ete for orchestra.

Details on the series available at Concert Hall Society, 250 West 57th st., New York City 19.

Week's Program For Symphony

BEECHAM'S program this week brings nothing new but much that is beautiful and relatively unfamiliar to Washington.

His own excellent version of some Handel music in a suite called The Great Elopement, is as much Beecham as Handel though thoroughly in the Handel spirit. The Walk to the Paradise Garden, from The Village Romeo and Juliet, is one of the tenderest passages in all Delius.

Mozart and Beecham are properly associated in the public mind. Sir Thomas will direct the Symphony No. 35, known as the Haffner, after the family for whom Mozart wrote it. The third symphony of Brahms is a favorite of the English conductor, and a work in which he can often be heard to grunt as he conducts. The concert will close, in typically British "pops" fashion, with a Berlioz march.

The Music Box

Beecham Due For Concert And Lecture

THIS is Sir Thomas Beecham week in Washington music.

The great leader will direct the National Symphony Orchestra in a typical personal program on Wednesday night. Thursday evening he will lecture on Mozart at the Library of Congress.

It would be erroneous in the extreme to regard Sir Thomas exclusively as a superlative conductor of Mozart and Haydn. He is as much at home in works of Strauss and Delius while his accounts of familiar music by Franck, Berlioz, and Tschaikowsky stand comparison with any of other great conductors.

IN addition to Sir Thomas' contributions to local music, the week promises memorable visits from England's illustrious ballet, Sadler's Wells. Outstanding vocal recitals are scheduled by Roland Hayes, Helen Phillips, and Hilda Crevenna.

The organ recital by Klaus Speer, Margaret Tolson's sonata program, and the American University Quartet list for tonight are outstanding additions.

Sadler's Wells brings to mind again the fact that they are dancing in Richmond Wednesday night—it's a short trip and bus excursions are being arranged by Stabler's Ticket Mart.

PATRICK HAYES announces that single tickets are now on sale for most of his individual concerts formerly sold on series. The five remaining concerts still available in block sales are for Horowitz, Jennie Tourel, the Vienna Choir Boys, Heifetz, and Bjoerling. Single sales for these start November 30.

Hayes also announces several discussions of how to secure an opera house for Washington. These will be given over his weekly radio program on music, WQQW on Sundays from 12:30 to 2 p. m.

The Rybier Music Club sends word that it has been discontinued for the coming season. Felicia Rybier, guiding spirit of the organization, will devote more of her time to personal musical schedules.

Howard Hanson's 25 years as director of the Eastman School of Music will be honored at a public concert and dinner in Rochester on November 19.

Hanson has done a unique and remarkable job in leading that school to its present eminence in American music.

Eddie Gallaher ON RECORDS

MULE TRAIN: Frankie Laine, Mercury and others. This song is destined to be talked about, read about, played, and overplayed.

In case you are as yet unfamiliar with "Mule Train," let me explain that the song is distinguished by the sharp crack of a whip, and the mule driver hollering "Heah, heah" as he cajoles the mules to "git along." The number proceeds to reel off some of the items on the train. "There's some cotton thread and needles for the folks away out yonder, a shovel for a miner who left his house to wander," etc. This is probably the first popular song to be based on a bill of lading.

THE FRANKIE LAINE interpretation reflects an attractive folk quality, combined with a feeling of strength unusual in a popular song. The accompaniment portrays the clippety clop of the wheels, while the sound of the whip adds a touch of drama. The tempo is brisk, suggesting the pace of a locomotive more than a mule train. This musical license is justified, however, by the vitality and drive it adds to the record.

"Mule Train" is to be featured in a forthcoming Vaughn Monroe picture, "Singing Guns," but Vaughn's record (RCA Victor) comes just shy of the target. He is a bit mulish in sticking to a slower pace, reminiscent of "Wagon Wheels" of yesteryear, which also had "go 'long mule" as its theme. The fact that Vaughn sounds as though he felt a bit foolish in yelling "Heah, heah" doesn't help matters much. He reads the line somewhat in the style of the late Ben Bernie, suggesting the Ol' Maestro more than he does an old muleskinner.

Despite the Frankie Laine competition, Bing Crosby's record (Decca) is not to be passed over lightly. While it seems strange to hear Bing, the whimsical troubador, hurling epithets at a pack of mules, he does it with charm and gusto. Moreover, he is in such excellent voice on the side that the myriad Crosby fans will hasten to add the record to their collections.

DECCA has also released a "country version" of the tune by one Buzz Butler, who has the unusual knack of yodeling half a tone off pitch. Capitol has also entered the "Mule Train" sweepstakes with a capable performance by Gordon MacRae.

Getting back to Frankie Laine, little effort was spared in making his an outstanding recording. Art Van Damme, unbilled on the label, provides the accordion background; and Mercury even went to the expense of hiring a vocal group, who sing exactly two words. As you WTOP Sundial and Moondial listeners know, this was the Eddie Gallaher Record of the Week. It may be the record of the year.

FROM A DISK JOCKEY'S MEMO PAD: Lovers of Vera Lynn's unaffected style will enjoy "Everything They Said Came True" She sings with beautiful feeling, and her voice is clear as a bell . . . The Harmonicats, of "Peg O' My Heart" fame have recorded an engaging version of "The Gallop of the Comedians" (Mercury). The song written by Kabalevsky, represents the most successful Russian invasion of this country since Khachaturian's "Saber Dance."

Eddie Gallaher is heard on WTOP every day except Sunday on the Sundial, 7:45 to 9:30 a. m.; Moondial, 11:25 p. m. to 12:30 a. m.

Toscanini Starts 12th Season on Air

NEW YORK (AP).—Arturo Toscanini, now in his eighty-third year, has returned to his NBC symphony broadcasts.

As in past years, Toscanini is splitting his schedule into two sections of eight programs each (NBC, Saturday, 6:30 p. m.). The second group will begin in February.

It will be his twelfth full season with the NBC Symphony, his first concert having taken place Christmas night, 1937. He was on leave in 1941.

Although his natal day goes back to March 25, 1867, Toscanini seems as spryly active as ever when putting his orchestra through its paces in rehearsal and on the air.

As has been the case the last two seasons, it is expected that one or more of the broadcasts also will be put on before the television cameras.

That's the case, also, with two other long-running radio musical programs now with weekly simultaneous telecasts. They are the Monday night performances of the Howard Barlow Orchestra and the Paul LaValle Band of America on NBC. The latter added vision just this week.

While both programs are putting in touches here and there for the cameras, they are adhering generally to the microphone patterns established over the years. The Barlow sponsor has been on the network nearly 21 years, while the other has run 22.

Trapp Songs Bespeak Their Faith

MARIA AUGUSTA TRAPP: The Story of the Trapp Family Singers. J. B. Lippincott. $3.50.

This is primarily a story of a family and its faith. That the family is a unique group of singers is important to the American public as it once was to European concert-goers.

But in the words of the author, "The Story of the Trapp Family Singers wants to be a canticle of love and gratitude to the Heavenly Father in His Divine Providence."

The baroness, as those who know her well must always think of Maria Augusta von Trapp, tells of her becoming governess and then mother to the children of Baron Georg von Trapp in Austria.

IN her early days in the Salzburg home of the Trapps, young Maria Augusta taught the six children the folk songs she thought all Austrian children knew. Music became the focal point for family gatherings.

Then as young bride to the baron, and mother of three more little singers, the baroness saw their music becoming a means of livelihood as well as entertainment.

For with Hitler and "anschluss" the Trapp fortune was lost. The family came to America and, after an unhappy season with one manager, found not only refuge but good advice and future security with Freddy Schang of Columbia Concerts.

THROUGH all the adversities of achieving American citizenship, sending the two oldest boys off to war in 1942, and the death of the Baron, Maria Augusta Trapp lived in a faith which is always sufficient.

This faith is the center of her life and of her book. The charm of the author's English is fully caught in her telling of visits to auction sales — again as she struggles with our language, telling an important bishop to "scram" or annihilating a noisy, fresh girl on a train with the epithet, "you—you bedbug."

The story of the establishment of the family in Stowe, Vermont, and the founding there of the annual Sing Weeks is all here.

Those who know the story and the family behind it will recognize the capsuling that has taken place to get it all into so short a book. For others it will be a friendly introduction to the Trapp Family Singers and perhaps to the faith by which they live.

"AMONG THE BEST"
Says—
Yehudi Menuhin

Interviewed before a recent National Symphony concert, world-famous violinist Yehudi Menuhin declared Washington audiences ". . . among the best in America." This, of course, did not come as a surprise to us. Serving Washington "home" audiences for years, we have learned that they demand the "best" in music . . . and we have provided them with, not only the "best" recordings, but also the "best" personnel in the city. Our staff at the Disc Shop is prepared (by study and talent) to help music collectors make the most appropriate selection of both popular and classical recordings. They have been trained in universities and conservatories so that they KNOW music. Selecting your recordings at the Disc Shop is as enlightening as attending a concert-lecture.

Vallee's Blue Chips Go on Video Films

and the producers of the show might just as well enjoy it.)

The reserve group will get a salute in "Weekend Warriors," chaplains in "Sky Pilot" and the counter-intelligence men in "Cloak and Dagger."

Besides the "live" material and the special films to be shot for the show, the producers have an esimated 500 million feet of film shot during the war, to play with.

It just happens that the Radio and TV Branch also handles a couple of other network radio shows, prepares both daily and weekly scripts for over 400 radio stations to produce locally, and lines up all radio and TV appearances of Defense personnel from top to bottom. But even if the small staff wasn't doing anything but the two new shows, it would be reflecting credit on itself—for quality anyway.

IF YOU believe that films are the only solution to television's problems you are in astute company. Rudy Vallee, currently in Washington to sing at the Shoreham Hotel's Blue Room, has invested a wad of cash in the theory, and he's reputed to be wise about money.

In a Hollywood studio with about 5000 square feet of shooting space he's toiled on and off for nine months to produce films for the voracious appetite of television. In all that time he's produced only 1½ hours' worth of films, mostly 3 or 4-minute musical shorts, and concludes there's plenty of work for everybody at that rate.

Most of the film, some of which is in color, is to be kept on ice until a suitable market opens for it. On the color matter Vallee remarks that "as soon as somebody says something can't be done, it's done" and predicts color television in a few years.

The longest Vallee film runs 26 minutes (4 minutes for commercials, see?) and includes Vallee, who developed into a superb comedian over the years, and Lionel Stander. Some of the films he directs, and in some he just takes a financial interest.

Laughs Dubbed In

LAUGHS are dubbed in on the comedy shows on the theory that it's safe because, delicate as the comedy art is, there is bound to be somebody who laughs at every joke in a large enough audience. The control room has itself a time deciding on the exact gradations—from titter to howl—appropriate to each joke.

Vallee says he doesn't know why human beings need to have their ego bolstered by having other people laugh with them, but they seem to.

The films cost Vallee $300 to $6000 apiece to produce. The $6000 top is for a story about cowchildren, you might say. (Well, if an old codger like "Fuzzy" whatshisname is a cowboy, what's a 10-year-old cowpoke?)

Vallee, who is wary of guest appearances on TV unless he is sure the producer agrees that "no human face can stand having a camera on it for four minutes while singing," prides himself on some of the TV-wise things his company has done. The title of the show and other "credits" are always announced aloud as well as lettered on the screen, so that Mrs. Housewife may be intrigued to come to the TV set and leave her dishes in the sink. Then, bingo! The commercial. (Vallee figures that what with people being creatures of habit, TV fans will automatically turn TV on in the daytime just for the sound, instead of using their dust-covered radio sets.)

And he has an infectious faith in a series of light news items—little stories about odd incidents—which he's producing. The idea is to pay people for tips on the stories.

And this man who emceed radio shows with a sure and comic touch for many years fully expects comedy video shows to go on film. He discovered during one guest appearance that some of the actors were tightening up and getting ready to explode, just over the strain of remembering a few lines. "All the fun we had at rehearsal went right out the window during the show," he recollects with a look of dismay appropriate to a man who obviously is used to having fun during his shows.

WTOP has expanded its schedule to find a place for Gene Klavan, former Baltimore disk jockey with the Henry Morgan flavor. The station will stay on the air until 2 a. m. every day beginning November 14 just to make room for Klavan. He'll do his stint from 12:30 to 2.

The ballots are in the cupboard. The contest to choose Washington's loveliest 15-year-old closes November 14. Ballots, which are Lux toilet soap wrappers, must be sent to Contest for Lux Girls, WTOP, Warner Building, Washington 4, D. C. Pictures of the girls can be seen in grocery stores, drug stores and in front of the station at 13th and E sts. nw.

The local winner will later compete with other girls for a trip to Hollywood. It's all part of the Lux Radio Theater's fifteenth birthday celebration.

Lots of People Have Radio

accents on the British air. Mr. Gorham doesn't mind Americans talking American on the air. (Many Americans, he says, have better radio voices than most Englishmen. Use more chest. Sound consonants more clearly.) His complaint was against Britons who ape American accents. They do it very badly, he says, an observation that may comfort a great many listeners who have been tortured by American radio actors aping the British.

Up in Anchorage, Alaska, the telephone company and the city government asked KFQD to stop broadcasting its disk jockey giveaway show. Audience response was so great that fuses were blown on the city's main switchboard, endangering the fire-fighting system.

NBC's press release concerning the return of Arturo Toscanini to conduct the NBC Symphony lists the announcer as a man named Bennett Grauer. This is the same guy who on beauty contests and tennis matches is referred to as Ben Grauer.

Color Video Records Operation

By Hal Boyle

NEW YORK (AP).—Watching a surgeon rescue a dying woman from the tentacles of cancer is an unforgettable sight.

I had this experience one day along with a number of newsmen and 1000 doctors invited to the demonstration by the American Cancer Society.

It was done by television, using a color process developed by the Columbia Broadcasting System. And it proved—whatever the immediate commercial future of color television may be—that this form of video already is of value in teaching surgical techniques.

The viewing screens were set up in the Biltmore Hotel. The television camera itself was 25 blocks away, trained on an operating table in Memorial Hospital.

The surgeon was Dr. Alexander Brunschwig, a famous cancer expert. The woman, about 51, was unidentified. She had agreed in advance to allow the operation to be televised, hoping it would be of value to the assembled doctors.

Hopeless Case

"THIS is in no sense a cure," explained Dr. Brunschwig. "Her case is hopeless. Radiation has failed. She is in pain, and this operation will relieve that."

He spoke through a microphone attached to his throat. The camera showed only his hands and the patient's abdomen as he swiftly made his incision.

Opening the body cavity, he discovered the malignant tumor had spread through most of the woman's lower organs. The tissues stood out in clear relief under color television. But whenever the camera switched back to black-and-white, they became almost indistinguishable.

Quickly, cutting here, putting clamps there, he freed the malignant mass. Its size drew a gasp from the audience. To remove it the surgeon had to take out the cervix, bladder, and part of the colon and intestine.

"Now we have taken out all the tumorous tissue visible to the naked eye," said Dr. Brunschwig. His inference was clear—there were other malignant areas impossible to reach with the knife. The blue-black cancer spots on the excised organs showed clearly on the screen.

Learn Something

"THERE is some question as to whether radical operations of this nature are worthwhile," the surgeon said, calmly, as he sewed up the severed blood vessels.

"But we learn something from them. And some patients have lived more than two years—are still alive—after such operations.

"The patient is relieved of pain and restored to usefulness—for a time at least. In any case we don't philosophize about it too much. We do for each individual what we can."

Later that day I sat before another TV set and watched Notre Dame sink somebody at football. It's an eerie thing—television, catching a life and death drama in the morning, football in the afternoon.

All through the game I kept thinking of the unknown lady in the hospital, who can't live very long but at least won't hurt for a while. I wonder what she will do with the time she has left?

WTOP Gives Moore Word On Ignoring

WASHINGTON listeners have been getting more than their share of personal attention from Garry Moore. Slightly confused about which half of his CBS hour-long show is carried by WTOP, Moore invited his studio audience to join him in a full 15 seconds of silent ignoring of station WTOP since "neither a jot nor a tittle of that part of the daily culture sessions" was being heard in Washington.

However, Cody Pfanstiehl, Press Information and Promotion Manager of WTOP, set him straight—more or less—via teletype:

"All Washington heard your 15 seconds ignoring. Was loudest ignoring ever heard in city where nobody ignores anybody who is anybody. You thought we didn't hear your ignorement. However WTOP broadcasts first half-hour 45 minutes later same day ignoring your second half hour except one each week which we play on Sunday at 1:30. Do you follow us? No; we follow you, 45 minutes later on weekdays but on Sundays you ignore whole country except Washington where WTOP broadcasts you."

Last Monday, Moore admitted he was in bad odor with WTOP and "if you can be in bad odor with a station 3000 miles away you are sadly in need of Airwick." Following a reading of the Pfanstiehl memo, Moore asked his cast to join him in 10 "shame-on-uses" followed by a hiss and then 15 seconds of spontaneous compliments to WTOP.

The idea of being heard on WTOP six days a week thrills him, utterly, Moore claims, because "that's Arthur Godfrey's home station where he labored so long and valiantly, taking out only enough time to dash to his office and run barefoot through his money."

Paul Whiteman and Junie Keegan . . . the 13-year-old songstress will have a regular spot on the Whiteman television show which starts tonight at 7 over WMAL-TV

At the Bridge Table

Annual Auxiliary Benefit Set for Next Friday

By Marian H. Barre

THE WOMEN'S Auxiliary of the Washington Bridge League will hold its annual benefit game for Childrens Hospital on Friday, beginning at 1 p. m. in Hotel Burlington, Paul E. Golden directing. It will be a two session open pair match, Mrs. John G. Fletcher serving as benefit chairman.

The trophy is the Schwartz Cup, named for the donor, which was won last year by Mrs. Pern Henninger and Miller Roberts. It has been in competition three times before, always on Armistice Day—choice of this date was not a random selection but a carefully planned bit of timing, November 11 being a day of recollection and of sympathy for the unfortunate. All net proceeds of the game go to the hospital to use as it sees fit. Price of admission is $3 a person, covering both sessions.

Players unable to attend are asked to send a contribution, the fund last year was boosted by many gifts from absentees. With the long holiday this weekend some fans may go out of town and thus lower attendance at the game. Incidentally, the early starting time, 1 p. m., is to accommodate players planning Saturday trips. The auxiliary benefit will be over at an early hour Friday evening.

Arlington Village Club and Euclid Studios will cancel their usual Friday games so that the membership may attend the benefit.

THE COUNT Club will divide its monthly master point quota among the winners on Tuesday evening, play beginning at 8 p. m., at 1614 Seventeenth st. nw.

On Wednesday the winners at all local games in October will compete for double awards in competition at the Washington Bridge League meeting in Hotel Roosevelt at 8 p. m. An "early bird" section starting at 7:30 offers rating point awards for nonwinners.

Master points circulate also at the Chess Club Saturday evening in Hotel Gordon.

Latest organization to start its annual duplicate series was the National Press Club, where the first game of the season was held last Thursday. David Sentner is chairman of the games committee.

The Lehigh Valley Bridge Association announces its eleventh annual tourney, to be held in Easton, Pa., November 11, 12, 13. District fans probably will skip this one in order to play in the auxiliary benefit, or to save their steam for the Winter Nationals, to be held this year in Philadelphia.

Nobody here went to the Penn State championships last weekend in Pittsburgh and only two localites went to Lynchburg. They were David Murray and Wallace Ashby, who didn't win anything. Murray recently captured three major championships on three successive weekends, at Reading, Richmond and Washington, thereby establishing a record that beats any ever recorded in this column.

RECENT winners in master point games in this area:

At the Federal Bridge League: Miss K. McNutt-A. E. Lane, Mrs. M. L. Fisher-J. G. Stone; second awards to Mrs. C. W. Zimmer-C. C. Lovenberg, G. Arkoian-David Murray.

At Buckingham Village: W. M. Lingley-J. F. Staver, with Capt. and Mrs. Russell Denham runners-up.

At the Women's Auxiliary: north-south, Miss L. Hunter-Miss McNutt, east-west, L. G. Tubbs and Stone; half-points going to Mrs. Rose Robins-Dr. L. Robins, Mrs. R. S. DuBois-E. R. Shepard.

At Arlington Village: Mrs. H. A. Walker-Capt. J. L. Herlihy, Major and Mrs. Roger Payne. Col. and Mrs. J. G. Seabourne were second north-south, with a tie east-west between Mr. and Mrs. M. Costello and J. P. Ferles and Lynn Carrier.

At a recent meeting of the WBL executive committee, President L. G. Tubbs appointed the following members to represent the local organization on the 1950 board of directors of the ACBL: Dr. A. J. Steinberg, Dr. N. J. McHugh, and J. G. Stone. The president himself is automatically a member of the board.

Contract

Point Count Clarified in Goren Book

WHEN CHARLES H. GOREN, America's top-ranking expert presents a new theory it marks a milestone on the road of bridge knowledge. In his latest volume, "Point Count Bidding in Contract Bridge," published by Simon & Schuster, Goren goes all out for a numerical valuation for bidding trump suits. For several years he advocated his point count for all phases of no trump bidding but extensive research and experimentation went into the development of the suit count before its publication. Now, confident that defects have been ironed out, he offers it for the use of serious students who seek for greater accuracy.

For the casual player the older methods may suffice. Goren states that he is not an evangelist, and it is not his purpose "to win anyone over to the true faith." He makes no attack on the efficiency of the honor trick table, thus bringing comfort to those who have an allergy to mental arithmetic. There is no denying that a "slight mental hazard of the larger figures," and a bit of memory work are inherent in the point count.

Most startling feature of the count values assigned for short suits in the opening hand. This is a shock to the bridge teaching profession that for years has striven to curb tyro's enthusiasm for a singleton with the bromide that he was "counting trumps twice." With the Goren suit count, a hand containing Spades-Axxx, Hearts-KJxx, Diamonds-x, Clubs-KJxx has a value of 14 points-ace, 4, each KJ-4, K 2 points for the diamond singleton.

A book by this author is always a feast of wit and wisdom and "Point Count Bidding is no exception, which is quite a feat in dealing with arithmetic, often considered a tedious subject.

Seymour's 'Masterpieces'

Book Throws New Light on Sculpture

By Jane Watson Crane

HOW many people who look at sculpture, see more than the surface appearance which confronts them from the angle at which they approach it? How many take the trouble to view the back and sides as well as the front, to take in the details in relation to the whole, the shapes of the surrounding spaces as well as the forms themselves?

Before Charles Seymour, jr., assistant curator at the National Gallery of Art, left to join the faculty of Yale University, he put the finishing touches on a book on sculptures in the Gallery collections. The book, entitled "Masterpieces of Sculpture," has just been released through Coward McCann. It is a work of art in itself, in which the illustrations are used not merely for identification of the subjects under study, but to awaken the spectator to the meaning of sculpture as a plastic medium with essential characteristics distant from any other.

During his stay here, Seymour's lectures were enjoyed by many people in Washington. He will return on December 2, to give a talk at American University, in conjunction with a sculpture show in the Watkins Gallery. His book on "Tradition and Experiment in Modern Sculpture" will be published by the university in December. Many of the works in the exhibition, which opens November 13, are from the District and vicinity and will also appear as illustrations in the second Seymour book.

Exhibition of Austrian Art

PERRY B. COTT, Seymour's successor at the National Gallery of Art, is at the moment immersed in preparations for the opening of the exhibition of Austrian art. For this task he is uniquely qualified, since he handled the first postwar display of Austria's recaptured treasures at the Hofburg Palace in Vienna for Gen. Mark Clark. Formerly associated with the Worcester Art Museum, he was a lieutenant commander in the Navy during the war and later assigned as an air specialist with the United States forces in Austria. Some of the paintings now at the National Gallery are old friends to him. He had to do with their return to Vienna after they were moved from the salt mines in upper Austria.

With Museum Since 1914

DR. ERNEST H. BUSCHBECK, director of the Picture Gallery in Vienna, accompanied the paintings to this country. Except for interludes during the two World Wars, he has been with the Kunsthistoriches Museum since 1914, and with Dr. Hans Tietze made arrangements for safeguarding the collections prior to the second war. In choosing the paintings to come to the United States, he had to make the decision not to risk any of the works on panel, fearing that the great changes in climatic conditions on this continent would harm the paintings on wood, perhaps entailing even greater danger than the ocean voyage.

There will, however, be some paintings shown here which have not been seen in any of the previous exhibits in Europe. Works of art from the Vienna collections have been shown in Zurich, Brussels, Amsterdam, Paris, Stockholm, Copenhagen, and London, but while a certain nucleus remained the same, the exhibition in each country has been different. Every time certain objects have been taken back to Vienna and others brought in their place.

In the meantime, the work of restoration to the Kunsthistoriches Museum, which was bombed a number of times, is going forward. Exhibits have been reinstalled in some of the galleries, including the Egyptian collection, about half of the Greek and Roman antiquities and coins and medals. In seven big galleries there is a combined display of paintings, sculptures, and art objects. There is also a temporary exhibit of Austrian paintings from the fifteenth to the twentieth centuries.

Dr. Buschbeck is planning to return to Vienna within the next few weeks, but will come back when the exhibits are ready to be packed up to go to their next destination, which is the Metropolitan Museum in New York. From New York they will go to the Art Institute of Chicago and from there to the De Young Memorial Museum in San Francisco.

High Jinks by U. S. Students Closes Mexican Art School

By Eugene S. Staples

SAN MIGUEL ALLENDE, Mexico (U.P.)—The American students with their blue jeans, crew cuts and pretty wives are gone from this centuries-old art colony, and most of the townspeople are glad of it.

The good neighbor policy had become somewhat strained in this town of steep, cobble-stoned streets 150 miles north of Mexico City.

The United States Veterans Administration withdrew its support from the San Miguel Art School officially because the school had closed. But it was almost certain, authoritative sources said, that an extensive investigation of the school and its students would have been carried out if the school had remained open.

The vacation was opportune. A United States veteran killed another former GI in a fight over a girl the week before the United States decision was announced. The uninhibited conduct of United States students in the streets and bars had caused murmurs of protest from the old-fashioned Mexican families who live in this typical colonial town.

Most of the students, predominantly veterans, are gone. They had to leave when the VA sent its last checks. Some of the more "serious" have transferred, with VA approval, to other art schools. Many have gone back to the United States.

One, Donald McHugh, 26, of Brooklyn, was put in jail. He is charged with homicide in the slaying of Leonard Zurnis, 24, also of Brooklyn, during a drunken fight over McHugh's 23-year-old wife.

Zurnis' death was the climax of what townspeople considered a year of gradual moral breakdown in the student body.

Painter Objects

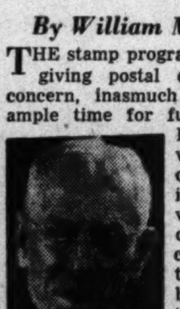
THE school itself was the object of a bitter campaign sponsored by the "Little Colonel" of Mexican art, David Siqueiros, one of Mexico's three great muralists. Siqueiros and his cohorts charged the school administration with "commercialism" and "discrimination." Siquerios also said there were no competent teachers.

The Mexican government, at least, agreed, and the school closed.

The Washington Philatelist

U. S. Stamp Plans Will Center on 'Sesqui'

By William M. Stuart



STUART

THE stamp program for 1950 is giving postal officials little concern, inasmuch as there is ample time for full discussion later on. It will be a year of historical importance with interest centered on commemorative stamps to be issued for the sesquicentennial. Files of the Post Office Department are filled with suggestions for new commemoratives and numerous stamps are coming in daily. Collectors and public officials, as well as citizens generally, are submitting plans for new stamps. Then, too, Congress may resume requests for new issues, as formerly.

The question of policy sanctioned by Congress and the department a year ago still stands, and before definite action can be had the number of stamps to be issued will probably be the first question to be settled. Although time seems plentiful, there are many who while considering their plans for a stamp the most important, are really the most impatient.

A junior night program will be the feature at the Silver Spring Philatelic Society on Thursday evening at the hearing room of the County Building, Colesville rd. The program will comprise magic by William Sawyer, exhibition of and talk on Scout stamps of the world by Richard Libby, exhibit and judging of junior albums and stamp awards to all junior exhibitors.

Special first and second trip cachets will be provided. Covers should be received by postmasters not later than November 27.

The Division of Air Postal Transport in the Bureau of Assistant Postmaster General Paul Aiken has been changed to the Division of Air Mail Service.

Bookatz, Gates Entered In Hallmark Competition

WASHINGTON artists Samuel Bookatz and Robert F. Gates are among the 50 painters whose work was chosen for inclusion in the American section of the Hallmark art competition. There is a French section for this contest, which has already been judged. Awards for the American group will be made on December 5, and the two top winners will compete for the final international prize. The 50 paintings chosen for each section will be shown at Wildenstein's Gallery in New York in December. Over 4000 applications were received for the competition in this country, including work by 70 artists from the District of Columbia, 106 from Maryland and 61 from Virginia. The prizes are in cash, with a top of $2000 for first in the national contests and $3500 for the international prize. The major stipulation for the contest was that paintings must relate to a Christmas theme. Jurors of selection for the American section included Dorothy Adlow, art critic of the Christian Science Monitor; Emily Genauer, of the New York Herald Tribune, Robert Woldwater of the Magazine of Art, Henry McBride, for many years art critic of the New York Sun; Robert Beverly Hale, curator of American art at the Metropolitan Museum, and painters Yasuo Kuniyoshi, Kurt Seligman and Eugene Speicher.

Dr. John Shapley, professor of art at Catholic University, will be the guest speaker for the opening lecture on the Vienna exhibition at the National Gallery of Art on Sunday, November 20, at 4 p. m.

A lecture entitled "The Christmas Story" accompanied by a set of 39 color slides has been prepared by the National Gallery Educational Department, through which bookings may now be arranged.

Included in the exhibition by Theodore Lux Feininger opening tomorrow at the United Nations Club, is a series of 12 drawings in water color and charcoal which will be shown for the first time. Feininger's most recent work is based on studies of people in crowded city streets — "a steady asauIt of color, form and movement." Feininger, who exhibited under the name of Theodore Lux until recently, is the son of the painter, Lyonel Feininger. Although born in Germany, he is a United States citizen, and has lived in this country since 1936. His work is in the permanent collection of the Museum of Modern Art and has frequently been seen in one-man shows in New York and Boston. This is his first display in Washington.

Facsimiles of charcoal drawings by Kaethe Kollwitz will be shown at the Watkins Gallery, American University, until November 10. They are for sale, at prices ranging from $3 to $5. Since her death, the available original works by this German artist have been much in demand and are now hard to obtain.

Ben Wolf to Join Art Magazine Staff

Ben Wolf, painter, illustrator, and art writer, has been appointed associate editor of the art magazine, "Pictures on Exhibit," published in New York by Charles Z. Offin.

Wolf, who has until recently been editor of the art page of the Santa Fe New Mexican, will present weekly reviews of art exhibitions in New York.

With a new children's museum scheduled for completion sometime before the end of the year, and the prospect of a special wing for the Cone collection in the near future, Baltimore's prospects of becoming one of the country's major art centers are bright indeed.

The Headmaster

Fine Schools Don't Always Mean Good Education

By Fred M. Hechinger

THERE is a troubled feeling among educators and parents that something ought to be done to improve the American school. This groping for improvement is both sincere and intelligent.

The money problem—financing of buildings and decent pay for teachers—is only a glaring surface issue, no matter how important. It captured the popular interest partly because there was a feeling that we might buy our way out of a dilemma.

But even where the financial problem was tackled with imagination and realism (and anyone who gets around to the overcrowded and obsolete schools knows how urgent the need is), the result was better schools, but not necessarily better education.

What is the trouble spot?

Undereducated

WHENEVER I talk to college deans and freshman-class instructors, the almost unanimous complaint is: The high school graduate is badly undereducated; his knowledge of English is below the minimum of grammatical speech and comprehensible writing; his desire for knowledge and his reason for learning hardly exceed the need to pass a test of one kind or another.

The University of Connecticut—surely not located in the backwoods of illiteracy—last year found it necessary to introduce a special test in basic mathematics and English. Students who fail to pass the test must take a noncredit course to make up for what the high school failed to teach.

This is serious enough for the colleges, which must "waste" time on instruction way below their level. But it is far more serious for some 75 percent of all high school graduates who never go to college. They are pushed into a complicated and competitive world without a complete set of the most vital tools for successful living.

Time for Death

IN A WAY all this may be the inevitable temporary result of a miraculous mass education system built up with incredible speed. It is a system still without an equal in breadth anywhere in the world. But it can only remain a successful system if it now starts to work on its depth. Without in any way diminishing the quantity of American pupils, the time has come to improve the quality of their studies.

Nor does this mean an increase in courses or even in study hours. The first need is for an integration of the work on high school level. At present too many youngsters are sent from the math room to the history room to the English class to the economics lecture and so on—without any way of feeling that all "that stuff" fits into something whole. The final examination is pretty much the test of ultimate usefulness, and anyone who remembers his own student-day estimate of exams won't think this a very convincing test.

The clue to what needs to be done comes again from the colleges. They, too, have been searching their troubled souls; but they have come up with experiments, and one of the reasons why the high schools have remained largely in the dark has been their smug reluctance to do much experimenting.

Some Experiments

HERE are some of the experiments, most of them reported in this column in the course of past years:

In a way, the Harvard Report set the ball rolling in front of the public eye. It pointed toward the need for general and liberal education in a free society, and it went into the details of how the teaching of formerly unrelated courses can be tied together into a sensible structure of learning.

But to some extent Harvard, in a scholarly way, was repeating at least some of the truths which Columbia College in New York had been testing for some 25 years. Keys to the Columbia plan had been the broad and required courses of "Contemporary Civilization," "The Humanities," and "The Sciences." Faculty "committees" had replaced the narrowly divided departments.

Then in 1947 President Charles W. Cole of Amherst, after two years of planning with faculty and alumni, came up with the most sweeping plan to date. He said: "We are trying to restore something of the old-time community of knowledge," and worked out a four-year plan of studies and a unified, all-faculty setup of instruction in which all students are to take part without exception. The first graduates of the guinea pig class won't leave Amherst until 1951, but most observers already find the plan successful. Philosopher John Dewey called it "a pattern for liberal arts training."

Many other colleges followed. Sweet Briar in Virginia, under young, world-conscious and progressive President Martha B. Lucas, replanned its curriculum into coherent groups of studies and turned itself into a first-class academic institution.

Too Slow

BUT IN THIS world of fast and violent motion, the high schools have moved slowly or—too often—not at all. Yet if they wanted an example of some necessary moves, they could easily find it by studying the new college plans in action.

If the American high school wants to get out of the rut of a horse 'n' buggy kind of education, it must consider the need for such changes and have the courage to make them. There will be difficulties, obstacles and obstructions, but progress never has a clear road ahead.

W-L Requiring Aptitude Test For All Future Candidates

LEXINGTON, Va.—With applications still increasing, Washington and Lee University will require all future candidates for admission to take the scholastic aptitude test of the College Entrance Examination Board.

The aptitude test is to be given applicants for the freshman class who desire to enter W. & L. next September. The university previously has required only applicants for competitive scholarships to take the test.

Washington and Lee thus becomes the first Southern college for men to make the examination mandatory for candidates.

Dean Frank J. Gilliam, director of admissions, emphasized that the aptitude test will not stand alone as the criterion of a candidate's qualifications for college work, but will be one of several factors used in the selection of freshman classes.

An announcement of the new requirement sent to heads of high schools and preparatory schools explains that "the task of selecting the 300 freshman candidates who appear to offer the strongest likelihood of completing successfully a full four-year college course is not an easy one, and as many valid criteria of judgment as possible are sought. The committee on admissions feels that the aptitude test will be an additional measure of great value."

Gilliam added that applicants should understand clearly that the required test measures aptitude and is not a test on specific courses or subjects.

After obtaining regular entrance forms from Washington and Lee, applicants may apply to the College Entrance Examination Board at Princeton, N. J., and, for applicants in the West, at Berkeley, Calif. Tests are given on December 10, January 14, March 11, and May 20 at several designated places in each State. W. & L. officials are recommending that applicants take the test on January 14.

Sweet Briar Funds Drive Nets $7640

SWEET BRIAR, Va.—Topping the record $7500 quota by $140, the eighth annual Relief Funds Drive at Sweet Briar College will assure substantial contributions to various international welfare funds and to national agencies included in the community-wide drive for the first time this year.

Marilyn Ackerson, chairman of the student funds committee which carried on the door-to-door solicitation, announced that 414 students had contributed or pledged $5854; 64 faculty and staff members gave $1430, and the remaining $356.41 represented proceeds of an auction sale, a movie and a $100 gift from a parent.

A considerable portion of the total sum will be used for room, board and other expenses of two foreign students holding tuition scholarships at Sweet Briar, and another sum will go to the World Student Service Fund. Students will vote on whether to continue some aid for the school in Paris adopted by Sweet Briar through the Save the Children Federation four years ago, allotments will go to cancer and polio foundations, and further sums will be voted by the student body to other organizations.

Education Week Starts Today

Parent-teacher associations throughout the country will join next Thursday in their own special observances of the twenty-ninth annual American Education Week, with emphasis on continuing programs "to make our homes and communities better places in which to live and bring up children."

Theme for the week, which starts today and continues through Saturday, is "Making Democracy Work." Sponsors are the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, the National Education Association, the United States Office of Education and the American Legion. Thursday is "P-TA Day."

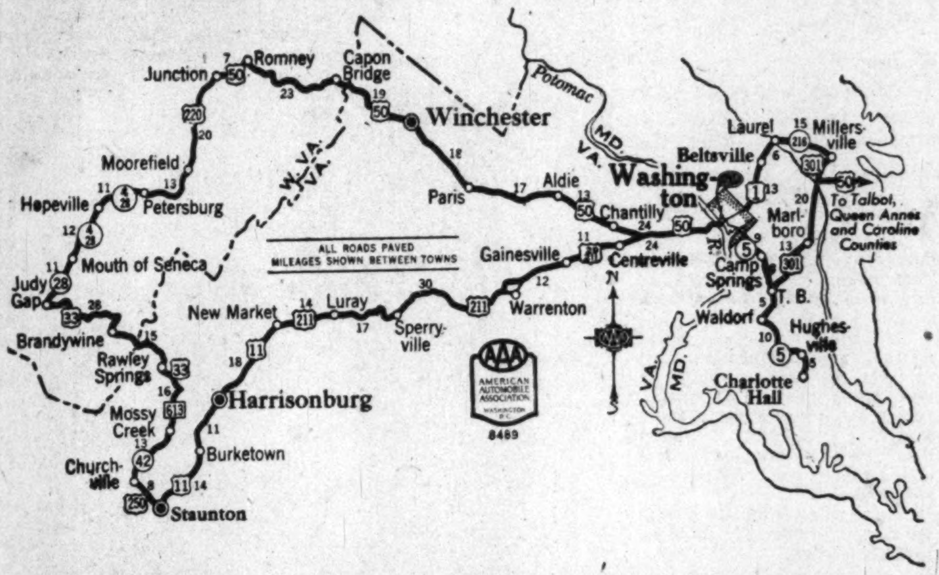
Topic for the day will be "Home and Community Obligations," with emphasis on housing, health and safety, schooling and parent and family life education, character building, recreation, and juvenile protection. All are major areas of P-TA activity.

Fish in the City

Miami Beach, Fla.—Some of the finest and most varied fishing in the world is to be enjoyed at Miami Beach. While big game may be caught in the Gulf Stream and bottom fish in shoal waters nearer to shore, many a good fish is landed off the banks of the ctiy's inland waterways.

Week-end Turkey Trip

'Look 'Em All Over Before You Buy!'



By Walter W. Hubbard
American Automobile Association

TWO of the most important turkey-raising States east of the Mississippi are involved in our long, weekend tour suggested for the near future, namely Maryland and Virginia. The interest which is usually expressed by the youngsters in live, noisy turkeys—and they can be noisy at times—is ample justification for a motor trip into either the Old Line State or the Old Dominion State.

Rockingham County, Va., the seat of which is Harrisonburg, and Charlotte Hall, Md., southeast of Washington, are two important areas where this gallinaceous bird so much admired on Thanksgiving and Christmas dinner tables may be seen "on the hoof." The process of turning such growing feeds as yellow corn, barlye, oats, meat scrap, wheat middlings and dried milk, into bulky birds known as the Bronze, White Holland, Slates, New Jersey Buffs, Bourbon Red, Narragansett, Black and Beltsville White is just as interesting to an adult sightseer as it is to one of the younger generation.

Go Westerly

LET our start be made in a westerly direction over U. S. 50 through Chantilly, Aldie, Paris and into historic Winchester, which is the core of one of the world's greatest apple-growing sections. Page your holiday apple pies, cider, applesauce and fresh fruit apples right here! At this time of the year a Northern Spy isn't a Civil War Mata Hari; it's a juicy apple, as the colorful displays which you will see at the roadside markets indicate. During the war the city was taken and retaken 73 times, and it was in the valley that Gen. Phil Sheridan managed to get himself the most hated man in the Army of the Potomac.

Nineteen miles northwest lies Capon Bridge, in the general vicinity of Fort Edwards, erected in 1750. Driving 23 miles west we reach Romney, and 7 more miles brings us to Junction, W. Va., where we turn south over U. S. 20 to Moorefield.

Driving through Petersburg, Hopeville, mouth of Seneca, Judy Gap and Brandywine, we are in West Virginia turkey-raising territory which clears its eggs, chicks or full-grown birds through the Rockingham County, Va., markets and processors. Fifteen miles southeast of Brandywine, W. Va., is Rawley Springs, Va., 16 miles north, over State 613, of Mossy Creek. Take State 42 to Churchville, and U. S. 250 for 8 miles to Staunton (pronounced "Stann-ton" unless you're an uninformed Yankee.)

Walter Reed's Home

TWENTY-FIVE miles north of this birthplace of Woodrow Wilson through Burketown and over U. S. 11, lies Harrisburg, named after its original settler, Thomas Harrison.

Visitors looking over the turkey farms are in for a surprise. In addition to the Bronze turkeys for which Rockingham County is famous and which attain weights from 35 to 40 pounds—heaviest of the turkey breeds—you may be able to see hundreds, or thousands, of white turkeys. The county is now leading the Nation in the production of the small Beltsville White turkey, a breed perfected at the agricultural farm, originally, at Beltsville, Md.

Believe it or not, these small white turkeys which range in weight from 10 to 12 pounds are now being cooked and canned, ready to eat, by one enterprising New York food merchant. In Harrisonburg, however, most of the processing of birds in that entire West Virginia-Virginia area is done, one cooperative plant alone having handled a nine-million-dollar business last year. Motorists may see this plant before leaving Harrisonburg and heading northeast to New Market, and then 14 miles to Luray on U. S. 211.

Maryland Leg

AFTER a visit to the colorful Luray Caverns we motor east through Sperryville, Warrenton, Gainesville and Centreville—back to Washington where we are ready to start on the Maryland leg of our turkey tour. Thirteen miles north, on U. S. 1, and we are in Beltsville, where the "apartment-size" turkey was bred. Another 6 miles brings us to Laurel, locale of slow-moving horses and fast-growing turkeys. Travel east over State 216 to Millersville and then turn south on U. S. 301 to the juncture with Defense Highway, otherwise known as U. S. 50. This leads to Talbot, Queen Annes and Caroline Counties, where many of Maryland's turkeys are raised and may be seen.

Next stop is Marlboro, and we continue on U. S. 301 to T. B., Waldorf, Hughesville and into Charlotte Hall, locale of a well known military academy and of people descended from the Normans who are raising turkeys and are glad to exhibit same for the benefit of visiting motor tourists.

Our return north is made by a 5-mile run to Hughesville, from Charlotte Hall; then 10 miles to Waldorf over State 5, and another 5 miles to T. B., Md., where we turn left and drive 8 miles to Camp Springs. Nine miles more, over State highway 5, and we are back in the District of Columbia. If, after this two-day trip to see some of the finest "gobblers" in America, we haven't cultivated an appetite for a drumstick of roast turkey or a slice of breast—with cranberries—then we must be vegetarian!

Bryce Has Its 'Wall Street'

Cedar City, Utah.—Far across the Nation from Manhattan, Bryce Canyon National Park has its own "Wall Street" in a silent city of eroded rock.

It is a narrow roadway carved between perpendicular walls upon which sunlight falls but seldom.

Contrasting with the click of stock tickers on Manhattan's Wall Street, here there is quiet solitude punctuated only at intervals with the clop of horses hooves and the chatter of visitors on the dusty trail.

Favored Tourist Spot

Nearby Fort Pulaski, one of the best preserved brick fortresses built for coastal defense by the United States in the first half of the nineteenth century, is a favorite sightseeing spot for vacationists at the General Oglethorpe Hotel or Hotel De Soto, Savannah, Ga.

A Nice Party Is Thrown By American Express Co.

By Orval Hopkins

LAST WEEK, as my immediate family will tell you, I related how Mr. Ralph T. Reed, president of American Express, had invited me to a "reception" on the occasion of the company's opening its new office at 624 14th st. nw. I had every intention of attending, too. For one thing, you don't get a free snor—ah, cocktail every day. For another, I understood several of my bosses were going to be there and I thought maybe somebody would introduce me to them. At any rate, I was unavoidably detained. I'm told it was a good party anyway.

AMERICAN Airlines is offering a $98 eight-day vacation tour to Arizona, including hotel accommodations, meals and recreation activities. All you have to do is get to Arizona and back on your own—presumably via A. A.

THE AAA is reactivating, resuming or continuing its fight on the 15 percent Federal tax on transportation. AAA says the tax "will undermine the Nation's travel industry" if we don't get rid of it. Recently in Cleveland, 600 delegates to the AAA's convention resolved that the tax "has no reason for being and must be considered an unreasonable levy on the millions of Americans who travel by air, rail, steamship and bus."

THE SENATOR Hotel at Atlantic City crowds me just a trifle and announces it has just completed extensive alterations. The hotel has built a new fireproof garage which has a private passage, enabling guests to leave and enter their automobiles without going outdoors. The well-known Sun Room at the Senator has been equipped with a big battery of sun lamps, which provide all the benefits of nature's sun, up to and doubtless including sunburn. The installation at the Senator is the first of its kind at any hotel in the country.

Oft-Traveled Cotten Likes Work Abroad

By Bob Thomas

HOLLYWOOD (AP). — Want a first-class, prepaid vacation in Europe, staying at the best spas and hotels?

Natch, kid. And it's available to you at no cost and little obligation—provided you're a topflight film star.

Take Joseph Cotten. In the past year or so, he has made three pictures in Europe—in London, Vienna and Italy. But he isn't complaining about constantly packing up his duffle-bag, or whatever movie stars pack up.

"This is the only way I could afford to take a European trip first-class," Cotten says, with perhaps unwarranted modesty about his money status.

Joseph doesn't cotton (ho ho—joke) to this tale about the rigors of making pictures in ill-nourished, ill-equipped Europe.

"Making pictures on location in Europe is exactly the same as making them on location at Lake Tahoe," he told me. "You undergo what people think are indignities in either place; they always say, 'This couldn't happen in Hollywood.' "

Whether at Lake Como or Lake Tahoe, Cotten remarked, there's always a wind machine to make the female star's hair blow.

"Then the sound man says it's making too much noise. So they try a wind tunnel affair, but that's too noisy, too. So someone gets the idea of waving a piece of board to make the girl's hair blow. It happens every time."

Vienna was the most inconvenient place to work in, said the actor. "We had black bread and cheese for breakfast while Valli, Orson Welles and I made 'The Third Man,'" he related.

But in Vienna he had the only milk he tasted in Europe. It was flown in from Denmark, the gift of a United States Army sergeant.

Conditions were pleasant in Italy, where he just shot "September" locations. He and Joan Fontaine were filmed at Rome, Naples, Capri, Florence and Pompeii.

Cotten didn't even grouse about England, where he spent nine austere months. "You soon find what you put in your stomach is not too important," he remarked.

His only complaint is what English cooks do to food. "How can they live just 20 miles from France, where you find the greatest cooks in the world, and know so little about good cooking?" he wondered.

Cotten has his own solution to England's fuel saving problem and he offers it herewith to Sir Stafford Cripps:

Have the British cook their vegetables one day instead of two.

2,800,000 Visited Italy Up to October 1

Rome, Oct. 27. (AP)—A postwar record of 2,800,000 tourists visited Italy during the first nine months of 1949, Pietro Romani, chief of the tourist bureau, reported.

He told a news conference the total for the year is expected to reach 3,200,000.

Romani estimated tourist spending will total 120 billion lire (20 million dollars) in Italy for 1949.

Money Fall Pulls Yanks to Europe

By Joseph S. Rosapepe

NEW YORK (AP).—Americans who go to Europe this fall and winter will get more for their money than at any time since the war.

This is partly because of devaluation of the pound and other currencies. Besides that, the European Travel Commission, a recently formed organization of travel officials of 16 nations, has launched a program to make it easier for American travelers to take their dollars to Europe.

"Devaluation," says Birger Nordholm, chairman of the commission, "means that the American tourist dollar will buy up to 30 percent more in Europe today."

Nordholm, who heads the Swedish National Travel Office here, said that if a tourist planned to spend $300 in Europe, he can now do the same things for $200.

For instance, he said, a meal that cost $1 before devaluation now can be had for 70 cents. Hotel rooms which during the summer were between $3 and $4 now will cost the traveler between $2 and $3.

Sir Harold Boulton of the British Travel Association adds that devaluation of the pound means Americans can enjoy longer stays abroad for the same number of dollars.

One British resort operator, William E. Butlin, who has popularized "holiday villages" in England and Ireland, said during a visit here last week that Americans would benefit from reduced rates at his resorts because of devaluation.

It Was ECA's Idea

OFFICIALS of the Economic Cooperation Administration have been urging European countries to eliminate barriers to travel by simplifying customs and currency regulations, lowering transportation costs and improving travel facilities.

The travel commission, an outgrowth of ECA suggestions, represents the first cooperative program for helping Americans to enjoy travel in Europe with greater ease and economy. Members include Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Greece, Britain, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Sweden, Switzerland and Turkey.

It seeks to encourage out-of-season travel when accommodations are more plentiful and prices for food, hotels and other items are lower.

Off-season travel also is encouraged through reduced airline rates and greater availability of space aboard ocean vessels.

Transatlantic airlines now are offering round-trip rates equal to the regular one-way fare plus one-third.

During the first seven months of this year, the 10 airlines listed more than 90,000 transatlantic passengers—an increase of 30 percent over 1948. This was made possible by the addition of new 61-passenger planes, making possible 80 flights a week from LaGuardia and Idlewild international airports.

Ship Capacity

THE necessity for increasing transatlantic ship capacity was urged recently by Undersecretary of Commerce Cornelius Vanderbilt. He pointed out that before the war there was transatlantic ship capacity for one milion passengers. Today ships can handle only 300,000 persons on 44 ships, flying the flags of 10 nations.

Even at that, this year passenger capacity has been increased 10 percent over 1948, the European Travel Commission said, with the addition of seven vessels—the Ile de France of the French Line, the Atlantic and Italia of the Home Lines, the LaGuardia of American Export Lines, and the Media, Parthia and Franconia of the Cunard Line.

As part of the commission's program, all countries of Europe are stressing particular tourist attractions.

France, which topped all other countries in the number of visitors this year as host to an estimated 200,000 Americans, calls attention to Paris and the Riviera.

Norman Reader of the French National Tourist Office—publicity chairman for the commission—says reduced prices in hotels and restaurants should make off-season travel there particularly worthwhile.

Britain, Italy and Sweden emphasize the cultural aspects and the appeal of travel in those countries for Americans whose forbears came from those lands.

Officials of both American Express and Thomas Cook & Sons reported an immediate increase in inquiries for travel accommodations after the change in currency values was announced.

France's First Port

The first port of France was the ancient Norman capital of Rouen, located on the Seine River about 30 miles inland from the coast. Later, harbor installations were built at Marseille and Le Havre, while the port development at Cherbourg is comparatively recent.

Conservation of Alligators In U. S. Reported Paying Off

By Robert L. Moora
NYHT News Service

The Department of the Interior gave a progress report yesterday on one of its strangest projects—the conservation of alligators.

The department deems them "both necessary and desirable to maintain a balance of wildlife." Thus officials became concerned years ago because the 'gators were being killed off faster than they were reproducing.

So in the '30s the Fish and Wildlife Service provided havens where allightors could be safe from man, and today their population has increased to such an extent that the service is permiting licensed hunters to kill about 1500 a year. Part of the profit from this—several thousand dollars yearly—goes to the Government.

Beliefs Dispelled

Some popular beliefs were dispelled in yesterday's report, primarily the one that the 'gator's principal pastime is lying partially submerged in a stream in wait for a human leg to happen along. Actually, according to the report, the Alligator Mississippiensis is quite afraid of man and seldom attacks. This, it said, was true even of the 15- and 17-footers of the "old days," which are rare indeed now.

Two 11-footers had to be removed from the Okefenokee National Wildlife refuge in Georgia this year because they had developed an unhealthy interest in people. One bull 'gator developed the habit of stalking fishermen and visitors along the canal.

The refuge officials said:

"Alligators grow from seven inches to a foot a year for the first ten years, and much more slowly after that. Should you see just the eyes and nostrils of an alligator above water, you may estimate his total length by allowing one foot of length for each estimated inch between eyes and nostrils. If the Alligator's face is a foot long, don't annoy him."

Most of the 'gator havens are in waterfowl refuges. One of the largest, the Sabine in Louisiana, was once a big, privately-owned alligator farm, but the alligators were pretty well depleted before the Government acquired it in 1937. Now it harbors about 15,000, of which only one third are three feet long or longer.

It is at Sabine that a few carefully chosen hunters are permitted to take alligators. They pole narrow boats around the marshes and canals at night, spotting and holding the reptiles by a bright spotlight and killing them with a shot through the head. They are required to save the stomachs for analysis.

This analysis has determined that 'gators eat crustaceans, reptiles, mammals, fish, birds, insects and amphibians. Smaller ones eat quantities of insects, shrimps, crayfish, minnows and small snakes and turtles; the larger ones eat the same, but their diet includes a large number of muskrats, raccoons, large birds, big snakes and even occasional 'gators.

There are two species of alligators, one found only in the southern United States and the other on the China coast. They are aquatic reptiles and closely related to crocodiles—the real maneaters of film and storybook fame. Crocodiles, which are found mostly in South America and sometimes in Florida, have narrower snouts than alligators.

Milestone for Neighborhood House

'Knockdown' Bridge Model Shown Here

A new "concrete erector set" bridge whose parts can be stockpiled at State highway department maintenance yards was unveiled here last week.

The model was put on display for the current meeting of the American Society of Civil Engineers, at Hotel Statler.

Bridges made of the standardized parts, it was explained, could be assembled on location for one-day erection of sturdy spans up to 50 feet long.

Concrete and Steel

Although the scale model displayed was made of aluminum, the real bridges would be precast concrete sections laced together both lengthwise and crosswise at the bridge site with strong steel cables.

Each section, somewhat resembling a compartmented coffin, would be 10 feet long by 2 feet wide, and weigh one ton, explained Raymond Archibald of Arlington, Va., bridge consultant to the Bureau of Roads.

Five such sections joined end to end and held together by cables would form the unit span for a 50-foot bridge, he said. And 12 such units similarly joined side to side would provide a roadway 24 feet wide.

Safe for Big Trucks

Archibald, under whose supervision the new bridges were conceived and designed, said the standardized parts would permit quick erection of bridges in multiples of 10-foot lengths up to 50 feet. Such bridges, he stated, could accommodate trucks up to 20 tons.

He estimated the "erector set" cost of a 24 by 50-foot bridge at about $5000. Such cost, he said, would be just for the parts, and would not include the piers or the labor of assembling. Machinery needed would be a crane capable of handling a 6-ton load, and a hydraulic jack to stretch the steel cables for bolting.

May Be Tested Here

Plans are under way, Archibald said, to construct the first of such bridges for actual road testing, perhaps within the Washington area.

Designed primarily for emergency use, the new bridges could be rushed to replace spans washed away in floods, or otherwise damaged. They also would be ideal, Archibald said, as temporary spans for detouring traffic during repair or construction of permanent spans. Afterward they could be disassembled and returned to the stockpile for later use.

Relic of St. Francis Xavier To Be Brought Here Tuesday

One of the most revered relics of the Catholic church—the right arm and hand of St. Francis Xavier, with which he baptized between 700,000 and one million converts in Asia in the sixteenth century, will be brought to Washington Tuesday for public veneration.

The 400-year-old relic of the "Apostle of the Indies" already has been venerated by several hundred thousand persons in other parts of the United States. When it arrives here Tuesday at National Airport from Boston it will be taken first to hospitals and convents in the Archdiocese of Washington. For most of the next two days it will repose for public veneration at local churches.

The relic will be venerated Wednesday morning at Dahlgren Chapel, Georgetown University. That afternoon it will be taken to Holy Trinity Church, 35th and O sts. nw., where it will stay until the end of special services scheduled for 8 o'clock that evening. The relic will be at St. Aloysius Church, No. Capitol and I sts., all day Thursday for veneration.

The relic will leave for Baltimore Friday, stopping at Georgetown Preparatory School, Garrett Park, Md., and Woodstock College, Woodstock, Md., en route there.

The relic is being escorted on its Nation-wide journey by the Rev. Arthur R. McGratty, S. J., of New York City, national director of the Apostleship of Prayer. St. Francis Xavier, who was a Jesuit, is the world patron of this apostleship.

The Rev. Neil Gargan, S. J., pastor of St. Aloysius Church, is in charge of the committee planning the Washington visit of the relic.

The veneration of relics, according to Father Gargan, has been a pious custom in the Catholic church for more than 19 centuries.

"The church," he said, "stresses that Catholics do not pray to relics, but to the saint represented by one. The saint, being a person who is particularly beloved by God, is asked to intercede with God for a particular favor or request from the petitioner."

Xavier was a Basque, was born to wealthy parents in a castle near Sanguessa, Spain, at the foot of the Pyrenees, in 1506. He died in 1552 at Sancian, a small island southeast of Canton, while waiting for sailors to take him to new mission fields in China. The sailors buried him. Quicklime was thrown in the grave to aid deterioration.

"When word of his death reached India," according to Father McGratty, "the Catholics there sent for his body. It was disinterred, and to the surprise of all there had been no decomposition whatsoever. On the arrival of the body in Goa, in southwest India, the miracles began to happen."

Foreign Flags Given at Girl Scout Parley

Local observance of Girl Scout Week closed yesterday with an all-day conference for Senior Girl Scouts at the Hangar Room at the Washington National Airport.

Scout leaders and 265 scouts from the Washington area met for an international program at 10 a. m. and a vocational guidance clinic after luncheon. At the morning session, presided over by Mrs. F. A. Mountford, Juliet Low, chairman for Girl Scout Region III, a presentation of foreign flags was made by representatives of several embassies.

The flags were accepted by Mrs. Adolphus Staton, president of the D. C. Federation of Girl Scouts, from Mme. Thor Thors, wife of the Icelandic Ambassador; Miss Christine Dalrymple-Hamilton, daughter of Admiral Sir Frederick H. G. Dalrymple-Hamilton of the British Joint Services Mission; Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Menn of Switzerland, Mrs. Jose Teodoro, wife of the Commercial Attache of the Philippine Embassy, and Olav Brahe-Pedersen, Agricultural Attache of the Danish Embassy, and his daughter, Elizabeth.

Shift of Rivers Into Caspian Long Planned

New York, Nov. 5 (U.P.). — An expert on Soviet geography said tonight that a vast Siberian engineering project connecting two Siberian rivers with the Caspian Sea had been under discussion in Russia for some time.

Theodore Shabad, consultant on Soviet geography at Columbia University Press, said the Russians envisage a series of locks, reservoirs, canals and natural watercourses extending past the lower tip of the Ural mountains.

He said it would be impossible for the Siberian Ob and Yenisei (Jenissei) rivers to "flow backwards," but that their waters would be diverted to the Caspian through the huge engineering project.

New York Cotton

New York, Nov. 5 (AP).—Cotton futures experienced moderately heavy selling in late dealings today, closing 5 to 45 cents a bale lower.

Most of the selling centered in nearby December contracts and represented liquidation, prior to first notice day November 25. Hedging centered in the March and May deliveries. Contracts were absorbed by shorts and textile mills, but buying was limited to the scale down. Some of the hedging accompanied a continuation of heavy spot sales in the South. On Friday spot cotton sales amounted to 77,220 bales, against 32,007 a year ago.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, Nov. 5 (AP).—Grains got off to an easy start and continued to decline most of the session on the Board of Trade today. Final prices were just about at the day's lows with only oats displaying some resistance to the scattered selling.

While there was nothing in the news to inspire selling, it appeared that many traders on the long side of the market wanted to get out over the weekend. This was partly based on belief receipts of corn on Monday may be quite large.

Wheat ended ½ to ⅝ lower, corn was ¾ to 1 cent lower, oats were unchanged to ⅛ lower, rye was 2 to 2¼ lower, soybeans were ½ to 1¼ lower and lard was 8 cents lower to 5 cents 100 pounds higher.

Weather was clear over the Corn Belt today and the Weather Bureau predicted more of the same for tomorrow. This led to the belief receipts Monday would exceed the 535 cars of last Monday. Arrivals today totaled 351 cars. However, purchases on a to-arrive basis were not large at 85,000 bushels, all of it new-crop grain.

Building in '50 To Slump 4%; Survey Shows

New York, Nov. 5 (AP).—The dollar volume of building and construction will decline 4 percent in 1950 from this year's expected total of $9,940,000,000, F. W. Dodge Corp. predicted today.

The analysis of building trends next year applied to the 37 States east of the Rocky Mountains surveyed by Dodge, fact-finding organization for the construction industry.

Two factors will cause the dollar-volume decline, Dodge said—an expected average drop of 4 percent in square-foot costs of building and an estimated 3 percent drop in physical volume.

Thomas S. Holden, Dodge president, and Clyde Shute, assistant vice president, anticipate a drop of 10 percent in privately owned building and engineering works and an 8 percent increase in publicly owned building and construction.

Dwellings to Decline

While the dollar volume of public housing is expected to jump 14 per cent next year, the analysis said, there probably will be an over-all decline of 3 percent in new dwelling units. This would be the result of a 9 percent drop in private residential building.

Acording to the Dodge estimate, private residential building contracts would slump to $3,260,000,000 next year from an estmated $3,582,000,000 in 1949. Publicly owned residential building is expected to rise from 368 million dollars this year to 420 million dollars next year.

The over-all dollar volume of nonresidential buildings will show a 6 percent decline, according to Dodge. Private nonresidential building will drop 12 percent from $2,404,000,000 to $2,118,000,000, while public nonresidential construction will advance 6 percent to $1,252,000,000 from $1,176,000,000.

Utilities to Gain

Public and private construction of public works and utilities are expected to gain 5 percent, from $2,410,000,000 to $2,525,000,000, with Government work in this field increasing 7 percent and private contracts dropping 8 percent.

Markets to Close On Tuesday

New York, Nov. 5 (AP).—Stock markets in New York and other cities will be closed Tuesday—Election Day in many states—but cotton markets in New York and New Orleans will remain open. Livestock exchanges in Chicago and other centers also will remain open.

Slower Auto Delivery Possible, Dealers Say

Persons who want to be sure of securing the delivery of a new car before the holidays were advised yesterday to get in touch with their automobile dealer at once. This advice came from M. Robert Deo, managing director of the National Automobile Dealers Association, who said:

"Although the production of new passenger cars in 1949 has been of record proportions, the current coal and steel strikes, coupled with preparations for new models by some manufacturers, may again result in delayed deliveries by dealers before the holidays."

Business Outlook

By J. A. Livingston

Impressive Performance of Stocks

Whoops, my dear! This stock market is as exuberant as it was in June, 1948, when investors and speculators, just prior to the opening of the Republican convention, celebrated presidential victory in advance. Then the Dow-Jones average for industrial stocks boomed to a level above 190, only 10 percent below the postwar high of 212.50 of May 1946. Now stocks are back right where they were when Republicanism was in premature flower.

Livingston

The performance is particularly impressive in view of the seeming success of Phillip Murray, president of the United Steelworkers of America, in persuading Bethlehem Steel Corp., usually regarded as the toughest of the toughies in steel, to extend its noncontributory pension plan. Labor seems to have won another victory.

Bethlehem, of course, had its reasons for "capitulation." Murray had to have a face-saver just before excommunicating Communist unions at the CIO convention. Besides, the agreement puts United States Steel on the spot. Now if other steel companies have to meet Bethlehem, costs will be equalized.

In Face of Bearish News

The market advance has been going on since mid-September in the face of a budget of poor news, as follows:

1. Aggravation of the British economic crisis which resulted in the devaluation of the pound.

2. President Truman's announcement that Russia had the atomic bomb three years before American and British military and scientific minds anticipated.

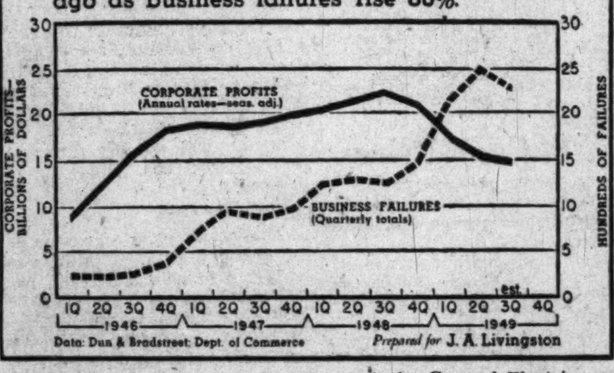
3. The threat of higher taxes, both individual and corporate, because of the rising Federal deficit. The Budget Bureau figures outlays will exceed income by $5,500,000,000 in the fiscal year which ends June 30 as compared with the 900-million-dollar deficit forecast in the President's message in January.

4. The rise in business failures, as a result of (a) the change from a sellers' to a buyers' market and (b) the deterioration in corporation profits.

And the full consequences of the coal and steel strikes are only now being felt by most industrial companies. Automobile companies, like General Motors and Chrysler, have announced that plant closings will take place because of a shortage of steel. General Electric suspended refrigeration output, idling 6000 workers. Maytag cut its output of washing machines by 25 percent because of "inadequate steel supplies." And so on.

PATTERN OF READJUSTMENT

Corporate profits fall about 30% below a year ago as business failures rise 80%.



Data: Dun & Bradstreet; Dept. of Commerce. Prepared for J. A. Livingston

The Long-Suffering Railroads

The railroads have been long-suffering. In July, John L. Lewis' coal miners went on a three-day week. Later came the two-day week, and then closing of the bituminous mines altogether. Then came the steel walkout. The strikes cut weekly loadings of railroad freight to less than 600,000 cars, or 37 percent below a year ago.

Result: Railroad profits were off about 60 percent in the third quarter. Then only the coal strike reduced traffic. October earnings will be down even more because of the steel shutdown. However, recovery will set in as soon as the workers return to the open-hearths and the pits.

Most industrial companies—187 out of 276 in my tabulation—recorded declines in third-quarter earnings as compared with the third quarter of 1948. That reflects the drop in business that began last December. The drop for all 276 companies was 3 percent, but if General Motors is excluded from the total, the drop becomes 16 percent. G. M., in common with most auto companies, had a whopping big quarter.

As compared with the second quarter, third-quarter earnings were up a bit. That's because business was on the rise throughout August and September. The gain was 2 percent excluding, 6 percent including, G. M. The following table tells the story—industry by industry:

	Per Cent Change

Presumably fourth-quarter profits, because of the strikes, will be down from the third quarter. And the year as a whole will be off more than the 8 percent decline so far recorded in the first nine months (including General Motors the nine-month decline changes to plus 2 percent). As for the stock market, it seems to be betting that production and profits in 1950 will be as good as this year. And profits in '49 are not going to be bad. The year'll be under '47 and '48, but higher than any other year in history.

Work Started On $10-Million University City

By S. Oliver Goodman

Work is under way on a 10-million-dollar shopping center and apartment development in Prince Georges County, Md., it was announced yesterday.

Walton

It will be known as University City and is located at the junction of University lane and Riggs rd., about 2 miles west of the University of Maryland.

About 50 percent completed already are a number of garden-type apartment houses, which will contain about 415 units. Work has been started on clearing and grading the area for the shopping center and for putting in streets, sewer and water.

Sponsor is the new firm of University City, Inc., whose president is John Walton, prominent Prince Georges County businessman. Walton revealed yesterday that about $7,500,000 will be spent on the shopping center and $2,500,000 on the University City apartments.

Novel features of the shopping center, Walton said, will include a parking area for more than 2500 cars and covered walks leading to the stores. A reflecting pool, which in the winter may be used as an ice-skating rink, will ornament the triangular shopping center.

The development will contain a department store, a variety store, theater, food market, restaurant, radio studio, bank, gas station, drug store, etc. Tentative plans also call for a five or six story office building.

Walton added that the University City project will cover 27 acres. He predicted that by next fall more than 80,000 persons will be living within a radius of 2 miles of the development.

Completion of the entire project is expected in 1951, although some units may be in use by next fall, according to Walton.

Among other large apartment developments completed or under construction by Walton and his associates are Queens Chapel Manor, Templeton Manor, Parkland Village, Ager Terrace, Gregory Estates and a shopping center at Coral Hills, Md.

Stock Gains Since June Put At $10 Billions

New York, Nov. 5 (AP).—The market value of all stocks listed on the exchange has been lifted by more than 10 billion dollars since mid-June and Wall Street is beginning to wonder how long its bull market will last.

Since June 13, when the price level plunged to a 4½-year low, the market has shown weekly declines only three times. Prices have advanced on good news and advanced on bad news.

WHAT STOCKS DID	Sat.	Fri.
Advances	327	432
Declines	226	353
Unchanged	232	288
Total issues	785	1073

The coal strike and the steel strike have caused, at worst, only minor interruptions. Prices rose again this week, with the immediate influence merely a hope of quick settlement of the steel strike.

Today, though, a good many brokers—as a tribe they are bullish-minded by nature are hoisting caution signals.

The rise, this group argues, has been too long and too large. A reaction, or a period of digestion, is inevitable. Some believe year-end selling for tax purposes may be the market's next stumbling block. Others claim that profit-taking sales will put the market in reverse.

President Truman made a prediction this week which was immediately seized upon as symbolizing the main driving power behind a further rise in the market.

The Federal deficit during the current fiscal year, the President figured, will run to around $5,500,000,000. The previous official estimate, made in January, was for a 900-million-dollars deficit.

A deficit of that size spelled out inflation to a large segment of the financial district.

A highlight of Saturday's market was a flurry of buying interest in several utility preferred stocks.

The balance of the market moved in a fractional groove. The Associated Press average of 60 stocks remained at 68.6. Sales of 460,000 shares compared with 410,000 a week ago.

New Machine Speeds Printing

A revolutionary photolettering machine for reproduction of display composition photographically in a wide variety of type faces and sizes has been introduced by the American Type Founders Co.

The new equipment produces photographic composition on film sharply and clearly in a simple, fast operation without setting, makeup, handling and storage of metal type and the pulling of reproduction proofs. All this is accomplished by the ATF-Hadego machine.

WARNING TO SMALL BUSINESS MEN

From THE WALL STREET JOURNAL

The small business man who gets ahead during the next few years will be the one who knows how to adapt himself to changing conditions.

Some of these changes will come from Washington, some from industry, and some from changing conditions abroad.

It will be necessary for you to keep in touch with these change and to have advance warnings of important new developments.

New Ways to Make Money

For example, new inventions, new industries, and new ways of doing business will create new opportunities for the small business man. One way to find out about these things is to read Business Bulletin, which appears every Thursday in The Wall Street Journal.

The news coming from Washington will have an important bearing on your future. If you want to know what the Government is planning to do regarding your business, you should read Washington Wire, which appears every Friday in The Wall Street Journal.

Another important factor will be the price trends of raw materials and merchandise. You can get this information in Commodity Letter every Tuesday in The Wall Street Journal.

You should also keep informed on international conditions and on trends in the British Empire (which often foreshadow trends in the United States). To do this, read London Cable, which appears every Monday in The Wall Street Journal.

One man writes: "You may wonder why a small business man, such as I am, could be interested in reading your paper. Frankly, I am not interested in buying or selling stocks and bonds. But I read your paper with intense interest. It has helped me formulate policies for my little business which have paid off. To know what the country and the world are doing helps, because even my little business is affected by world affairs. (Signed) B. T."

$20 Spent May Save You $2000

Because the reports in The Wall Street Journal come to you DAILY, you get the fastest possible warning of any new trend that may affect your business and personal income.

The Wall Street Journal is the complete business DAILY. Has largest staff of writers on business and finance. The only business paper served by all four big press associations. It costs $20 a year, but you can get a Trial Subscription for 3 months for $6—77 issues (in U. S. and Possessions). Just tear out this ad and attach check for $6 and mail. Or tell us to bill you. Mike Discovers Liver ....

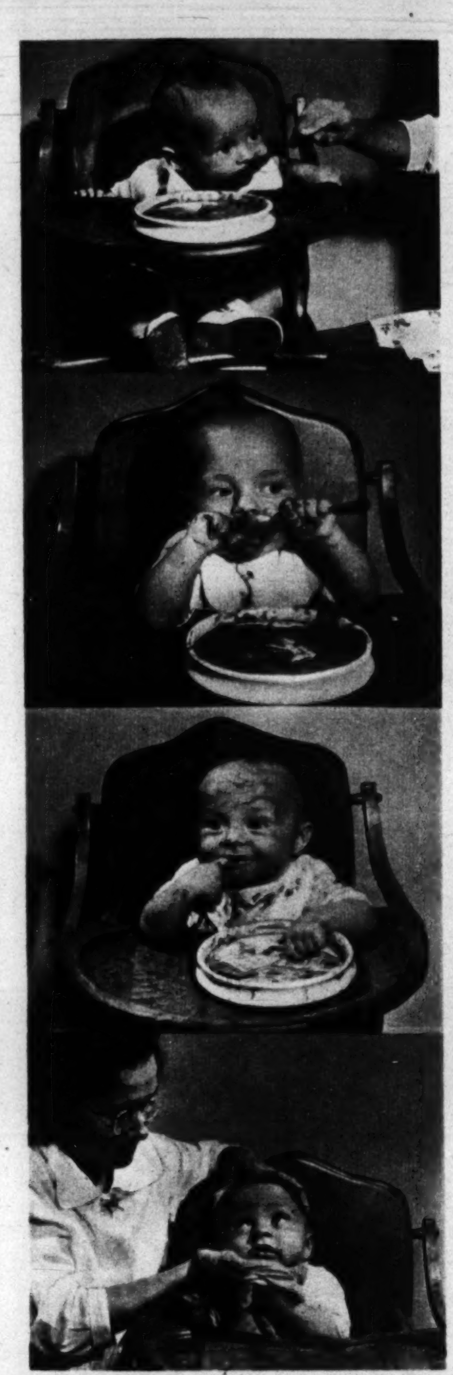
Tasting liver for the first time, Michael McPartland gets face right down to business.



Michael likes liver so well he covers face and bib with it, gets cleanup from mother. Michael's comment: a contented "Glug!"

... He eats some, gaily spreads the rest over face, hair and bib

A LITTLE EARLIER, but no less important to any growing boy than long pants and his first date, is the day when he leaves off fruit juices and milk, clamps his toothless jaws on solid food for the first time. When Michael McPartland, aged seven months, recently reached this climactic point, his mother, Josephine, provided him with a bib, a spoon, and a dish of strained liver. Michael ate, using both inside and outside of his face, with the gleeful results you see here.

FLOOR-PLAN RUGS BROADLOOM CARPETS

Nice furniture—but no rug on the floor. Paul and Lavonia Goolsby moved from apartment to house to give their son, young Michael, elbow-room. Their old living room rug went into their new dining room. Their new living room floor went bare. Naturally, the Goolsbys wanted broadloom—found they could afford it in an Alexander Smith Floor-Plan Rug, ready-made to fit their room. They bought it at Black's in Houston—12′ x 16′6″—for only $165. See it, in color, at the top of this page.

Color Cards by Clara Dudley, Alexander Smith color-consultant, helped the Goolsbys choose a Floor-Plan pattern that would blend with the colors already in their living room. Prices for all 40 Floor-Plan patterns are amazingly low. In the 9′ x 12′ size, the beige floral at the right is about $70; the green twist-weave is about $105; the grey sculptured pattern is about $110.

The Turning Point...

ELSA SCHIAPARELLI: The sweater was reversible . . .

FOR THE YOUNG ITALIAN GIRL and her Polish husband, the America of 1926 was hardly a "land of opportunity." To help support her baby, Elsa Schiaparelli (pronounced Scapa-relly) got a job writing movie scripts. It wasn't enough; the marriage, made tense by poverty, split. After three years, Elsa returned alone to Europe.

She settled in Paris, decided to support herself and the child, although her parents begged her to return to Italy. She turned to freelance writing.

To save money, artistic Elsa designed and made all her own clothes. One day she met a wealthy Italian friend, whose eyes widened when she saw Elsa's sweater.

A New Sweater Idea

The Italian friend had never seen a sweater like it before. It was reversible; the inside was black, the outside white. The top folded back, revealing the black-and-white contrast.

Her friend paid Elsa for a copy. Others came trotting to Elsa's apartment.

To keep up with the demand for sweaters, Elsa hired a seamstress. When a buyer from an American store ordered 40 sweaters, plus matching skirts, Elsa hired 10 more girls, and "Madame Schiaparelli" was in business.

Today Schiaparelli gowns, dresses, perfume, and hats are world-famed. This fall Elsa came back to the U. S. With her came plans for an American branch of the Schiaparelli empire. By designing and making her clothes here, Elsa will save tariff costs, sell her dresses in U. S. stores for as low as $75.

To many women, of course, that's still a lot of money for a dress; no woman knows that better than Elsa Schiaparelli, who once made her own clothes!

SNOW FACE

A giant's features appear in the Alps

FLYING ACROSS THE ALPS one morning, Photographer Paul Senn pointed his camera at one of the peaks of the Bernese Oberland, about 45 miles southeast of Berne, Switzerland. His camera saw what human eyes probably had never seen before. Wind action, or possibly snow cave-in, had etched into the east flank of the Morgenhorn, an 11,000-foot peak, the contours of this human face.

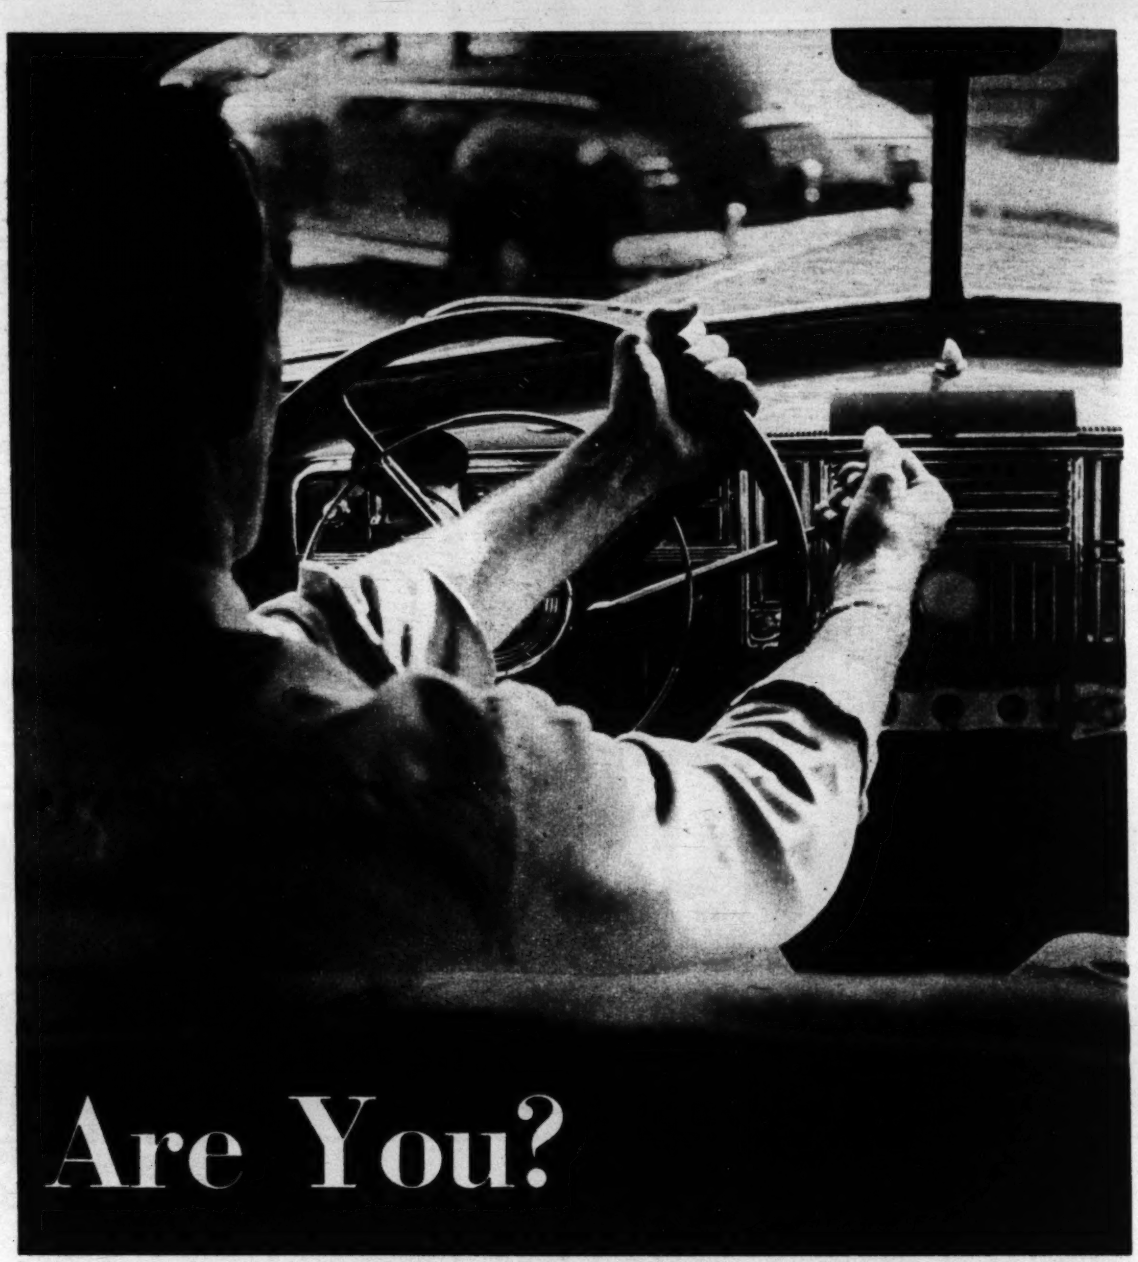
How Good a Driver Are You?



Do you know what this driver is doing wrong? (1) He's shifting on turn, (2) has poor grip on wheel.

By JOHN DEVANEY

How much do you know about good automobile driving? Do you know, for example, whether it's a good idea to rest your elbow outside the window sill while you're steering? Does this elbow-resting hamper or help your driving?

Millions of American motorists, especially experienced drivers, have acquired their own subconscious driving traits. Some of these traits make them better drivers; some make them potential killers.

In Pennsylvania, for the past two years drivers have been brushing off some of these acquired traits. Their brush: a test administered by a former state traffic official who now is safety expert for the Atlantic Refining Company. To date, more than 75,000 motorists have taken the test. It's a voluntary check system that could well be applied in every state in the union.

Take the case of a Philadelphia woman driver, Mrs. Herman Friedman. In 25 years of driving, Mrs. Friedman had never been in an accident; recently, however, other motorists, especially truck drivers, had been shouting at her in the middle of crowded intersections.

To find out why, Mrs. Friedman took Atlantic Bureau's road test with George S. Lowe, head of the program. He checked her driving carefully.

"I found my error," she told friends later. "I was making bad left-hand turns."

Mrs. Friedman shifted gears (as demonstrated by the driver in the photograph above) while turning; thus she was unable to display proper hand signals. As a result, other drivers were confused. Confusion causes anger.

Otherwise, Mrs. Friedman's driving ability was well above average. But on the advice of Atlantic inspectors, she's now practising those left turns, is sure "I can improve them."

What Errors Are Most Common?

She probably can. Thousands of other Pennsylvania drivers X-rayed by the Bureau's inspectors have cleaned up sloppy driving habits acquired unconsciously; they've also learned some good-driving techniques never taught them before. George Lowe's six inspectors have methodically totalled up all the errors committed by drivers. The ten most common are listed below; along with them goes the Bureau's advice.

1. Coasting to a stop at an intersection: Many drivers forget, George Lowe tells you, that their car is out of control, in a sense, when they disengage the clutch and trust their brakes alone to stop the car. The correct procedure: Apply your brakes first, then slow down and disengage the clutch when you've almost come to a stop.

FIND YOUR DRIVING ERRORS

Just how good a motorist are you? Check yourself on this score sheet, find out your driving weaknesses.

1. Do you make turns like car in picture above? (Yes) (No)

2. In 40 m.p.h. traffic do you always stay 10 car lengths behind next vehicle? (Yes) (No)

3. Do you usually coast down grades? (Yes) (No)

4. Do you always move over when other drivers blow horn to pass you? (Yes) (No)

5. Do you apply brakes gradually? (Yes) (No)

6. Do you usually find yourself travelling much slower than other cars on busy roads? (Yes) (No)

7. Have you ever driven 75 m.p.h.? (Yes) (No)

8. Do you always signal when moving from lane to lane? (Yes) (No)

9. Do you ever shout at other drivers? (Yes) (No)

If you answered yes to all these questions, you have bared driving traits that are: 1. Bad; 2. Good; 3. Bad; 4. Good; 5. Good; 6. Bad; 7. Very Bad; 8. Good; 9. Very bad.

After a test, the inspector totals Mrs. Herman Friedman's score, explains how bad left turns confuse others.

Starting the car, inspector demonstrates cause of stalls. His left foot should be pressing down on clutch pedal.

2. Making a left turn: Inspectors found many veteran motorists cutting too wide or too close in making turns. They also discovered that many drivers shifted gears while turning. Warns Lowe: "You should remember that turning the wheels slows your car's momentum; by shifting at this moment, you're liable to stall as well as fail to signal. But the biggest danger is this: By taking one hand off the wheel to shift during a turn, you may lose control of the car."

Hands at Ten and Four o'Clock

3. Steering: You can lose control of the car driving with two hands as well, the Bureau reports. It found that many drivers place their hands in unstable positions on the wheel. Suggest Lowe's experts: In making turns, the best positions for the hands are at ten o'clock and four o'clock. For normal driving, nearly any position with the hands about 180 degrees apart is acceptable. What isn't recommended: Resting your elbow outside the window while steering. If you find, as many good drivers do, that resting an elbow helps you steer, make sure that the rest is inside the car, where the elbow is safe from flying stones and other vehicles.

4. Approaching intersections and one-way streets: Too many drivers, the Bureau finds, bull their way through an intersection without looking to the right or left; others veer onto one-way streets without making sure that some confused driver isn't coming the wrong way. The Atlantic experts warn: "Always look each way before you go through an intersection. The same thing applies to one-way streets. You know it's one-way—but to a drunken driver, every way is one way."

5. Making a right turn: For some reason, fewer drivers make errors on turning right than left. Nevertheless, there are still too many motorists who cut in front of traffic to make a sudden right.

6. Coming to a stop: Lowe will tell you that many long-time drivers don't stop at traffic lights in time, end up with part of the car in pedestrian lanes. Comments Lowe: "Besides endangering the pedestrians, other vehicles might very easily ram the nose of a car sticking out into the intersection."

7. Starting the car in gear: Even the best drivers, says Lowe, will occasionally try to start the car without disengaging gears. The traffic experts hammer home this rule: Always depress the clutch when starting, even when you're positive the car is in neutral—it's always a safe habit!

8. Failing to signal properly: The driver who forgets to stick out his hand when making a turn isn't the only offender in this class. There's also the motorist who "holds up the roof." To Lowe's inspectors, he's the driver who grasps the top of the car with his left hand while driving with his right; the driver behind him doesn't know whether the "roof-holder" is getting ready to signal that he is going to turn left, right, or upside down.

9. Speeding: What Atlantic's traffic-safety experts mean by speeding: Driving too fast past construction work, driveways and other hazards; also taking a turn on two wheels. Says Lowe: "Slow down before the turn, not at the turn."

10. Straying from the proper lanes: One pet theory of Lowe's: Bad driving is caused mainly by selfishness. The motorist, for example, who straddles the white line between lanes is guilty, says Lowe, of selfish disregard for the other fellow's rights.

Wife Became Best Driver

These ten errors, of course, are only the most-noted mistakes.

Lowe's inspectors will tell you the average driver they examine is 35 years old, and has been driving from 10 to 15 years.

If you take the test you find that the inspectors are personable, polite, former high school and college teachers of driving. They first check your driver's license (you can't take the test without one), then explain how the test is conducted over a special five-to-seven-mile traffic course.

On these courses, the experts include as many typical traffic situations as possible. The inspector notes how you meet these situations, jots down your errors on a special form. This form contains items like these:

"When starting, fails to check traffic conditions."

"Brakes on curves."

"Fails to sound horn when passing."

"Coasts down grade and to stop signs."

Every time you make one of these errors, the inspector pencils a mark next to the item. At the end of the course, your sins are discussed and the inspector sums up his score.

One Philadelphian and his wife recently went down to Lowe's Bureau for a check-up, came back home and compared their scores. The husband wrote to Lowe: "I taught her to drive, and now she scores as a better driver than I am!"

THESE GOOD DRIVERS HAD PICKED UP BAD HABITS

Stalled on hills: Mrs. John Moore, in test, found she was removing foot from clutch too quickly.

He strayed: Gregory Schultz, a ten-year driver, crossed highway lines, didn't know he erred.

Her engine would stall: Mrs. Willard Sidlick, of Broomall, Pa., had trouble shifting on hills, turns.

He turned too close: Howard Hampton, a driver for 18 years, made left turns on too narrow a dime.

AWED AUDIENCE IN CULLOWHEE PACKED WESTERN CAROLINA TEACHERS COLLEGE AUDITORIUM, SAT HUSHED AS MARGARET SANG, THEN GAVE THE PRESIDENT'S DAUGHTER A TWENTY-MINUTE OVATION.

Cullowhee's Big Day

Everybody but Everybody turned out to hear Margaret Truman sing

TO THE 1500 people of Cullowhee, N. C., it was the biggest day in years. Harry Truman's daughter was coming to the little mountainside town to sing.

Cullowhee, a comfortable cluster of small homes and college buildings, had been picked by Margaret Truman as the first stop on her first concert tour; and the 625 students at Western Carolina Teachers College, who make up most of Cullowhee's population, had been preparing for the event for a month. The campus auditorium (Hoey hall) had been swept out, its 1,200 seats carefully dusted; and students had taken down square dance posters and tacked up signs saying that Margaret was coming to sing.

What would she be like? Cullowhee had heard she had her father's friendliness and charm – and if her voice was not yet the best in the business all Cullowhee was ready to like her and tip its hat to her for her ambition and courage.

Day of Disappointment

Finally came Oct. 4, the concert date, and with it a disappointment for Cullowhee. For Margaret, having come by sleeper the day before from New York, was staying not in Cullowhee but at an inn in Cashiers, N. C., 23 miles away. Nor would Cullowhee have a chance to open to her its hospitality.

At first Cullowhee had hoped to welcome Margaret at a reception in the college dining hall. The Secret Service vetoed that. So a reception after the concert (with no handshaking) had been suggested. "No thanks," said Manager James Davidson, "we'd rather not." Trouble was: a precedent would be set that would be hard to follow in St. Louis, Detroit, Washington and other large cities on her tour. A singer on tour must guard her strength; the least fatigue will show in her voice.

Finally, it had been agreed that a committee from the college might welcome Margaret, not in Cullowhee but by making a 46-mile round-trip to Cashiers–the day before the concert. And so to Cashiers on October 3 went President Paul Reid, accompanied by Mrs. Lilian Buchanan, chairman of the college music committee. There in High Hampton Inn they bade Margaret welcome.

All Cullowhee understood the need for conserving a singer's strength, but all Cullowhee, students and townsfolk, was disappointed nevertheless.

By FRANK De BLOIS

And so Margaret slept in the mountain inn at Cashiers, and it was not until 7:45 p.m., next night, 15 minutes before the concert, that Cullowhee got a glimpse of her at all. Most of the audience (Hoey hall was sold out) were in their seats–some had been there an hour – when a four-door sedan drove-up–not to the front door but to the stage entrance. Before and after it came cars of state police and Secret Service men. By this time, Cullowhee was fully alerted to the screen of protection around pretty Margaret. A male student, watching the arrival, commented: "I'd just hate to touch that door handle!"

And so the small stage-door crowd stood back self-consciously. There was an awkward pause. It was accompanist Herman Allison who finally emerged, turned the door handle of the front seat, where Margaret had ridden with the chauffeur, and let her out.

Inside Hoey hall, the crowd, which included a few evening wraps and had paid up to $3 per seat, stirred. After introduction by Pres. Reid, Margaret entered from the wings. After three short songs in English, she sang, in Italian, the Dove Song aria from Mozart's "Le Nozze di Figaro;" then, in German, four selections by Schumann, Schubert and Strauss. Cullowhee was delighted.

At 10:30, concert over, Cullowhee saw the big sedan whisk her away again. Margaret got $1,500 for her appearance (from which all her party's expenses would have to be taken). Next day in Cullowhee, the square dance posters were up again.

On stage, Margaret has charm and poise of a veteran of concert circuits. Offstage she shares many of her father's informal, fun-loving and gregarious mannerisms.

Here's what Cullowhee's college students thought about Margaret Truman's concert

Although fullback Joe Hunt "didn't understand" first part of concert, he found Margaret's voice better than he had expected. He liked the English selections best. Priscilla Sneed (right) liked the songs, thought Margaret "seemed nervous at times." She felt that Margaret had a "wonderful" stage personality. However, she didn't care too much for Margaret's gown.

Dick Scott, president of college student body, soberly believes Margaret "has a long way to go" before she reaches top. "But," says Dick, "she's improving."

Pert freshman Kit Blankenship enjoyed concert, was impressed with Margaret's personality. "She's a nice girl," said Kit, "and she's much prettier than her pictures." Kit thought Margaret "held back" on some of her high notes, slurred some low ones.

CULLOWHEE'S MUSIC LOVERS – from professional critic to amateur claque—were impressed but not overwhelmed by Margaret's voice.

The experts talked first. "She sang the Mozart aria racily and with sensitivity," reported the music critic of the Asheville Citizen. "Her volume, range and control are evidence of considerable development," said Elda Vettori, former opera performer who now lives in Asheville.

Then the amateurs spoke up. "As a singer," said undergraduate Paul Raione, "Margaret has some definite possibilities. She's getting better."

"I like the kid," said 19-year-old undergraduate Tom Grogan of 25-year-old Margaret. "She'll go places."

Sophomore Charlie West sat through the concert wearing a puzzled expression. "I wish," said he, "she'd learn it all in English."

Among Cullowhee students and townsfolk, Margaret's manner and appearance made a bigger hit than her voice. "She was so friendly," one said. "You'd never guess from the neighborly way she behaved that she was the President's daughter!"

Bruce Burleson (right), local wrestling champ, likes Margaret's looks. "In fact, said Bruce, "I'd like to date that girl."

Cheerleader Pat Sawyer, a junior, thought Margaret would be a better singer if she were not a President's daughter. "That puts her under a terrific strain," she said. Pat said she liked Margaret's gown.

Basketball star "Dusty" Rhodes said he thought Margaret's voice had improved greatly since the last time he heard her.

Who's King of the Jung

By IVAN T. SANDERSON
NATURALIST AND AUTHOR

Though by all odds the strongest beast in the jungle, even the elephant will

It's not the lion. He's an overrated coward with a penchant for sleeping

HAIR-RAISING TALES about animals always makes news, and last summer's celebrated, if bloody, encounter between a circus gorilla and a panther was no exception. The ape gained entrance to the panther's cage, and the cat promptly tore off the ape's arm, leaving the animal to be dispatched later by its keeper.

Many people reacted as if a table-tennis champion had knocked out a boxer. But then people are constantly being surprised about animals. Practically everything that is commonly accepted about their behaviour, it sometimes seems, turns out, on investigation, to be untrue!

Lioness

Take for example the lion. For reasons which are partly psychological, partly historical, most people consider the lion the noble King of Beasts. The gorilla, on the other hand, is usually regarded as an indomitable thug, an only slightly subhuman creature of the utmost savagery and strength.

In point of actual fact, the lion is a somewhat pompous coward with a great penchant for sleeping, and the mighty gorilla is a retiring vegetarian who has been known to scramble away in terror at the sight of a troupe of small monkeys.

Far from being the king, the lion is plagued by a host of lesser creatures. Among them is an insignificant little animal, half the size of a rabbit, known as the zorille.

Many a hunter sitting by a kill at night, waiting to bag lions, has been amazed to see half a dozen of the great cats whimpering at a safe distance from the meat while a zorille placidly sniffs the choicest scraps. The explanation for this cowardly behavior is that the zorille has about the same glandular equipment as our own skunk, plus remarkably good aim. Like the skunk, will retreat before one jungle enemy.

he, too, gets respect from all comers.

I once witnessed an even more disillusioning exhibition at a zoo lion house. A hungry lion had just settled down to devour its daily quota of meat when a curious yellow-jacket happened by. The lion jumped back. The wasp buzzed over the meat.

The lion looked pained and made a pass at the intruder, whereupon the buzzing rose to an angry pitch and the lion backed off a few feet. There he lay down with his great head on his paws, totally cowed by an insect a ten-thousandth of his weight.

The Real King!

If there is a King of Beasts at all, especially in what is commonly called the jungle, I would personally cast my vote for the largest available species of hornet! There are no animals, not even the elephant, that can withstand a concerted attack by a flight of hornets—and few will pause to argue matters with even a single individual.

Despite a lot of excellent fiction, animals seldom fight in the wilds. There may be a violent male sparring at mating seasons within a herd, and meat-eaters customarily kill fear-stricken vegetable-eaters.

Even so, there are exceptions, notably mothers whose offspring are threatened. The placid giraffe will stand up to a charging lion under these circumstances, and one has been known to kick a lion's head off with her powerful back leg. A female eland, the largest of the antelopes, can fight ferociously, too. She has been known to kill leopards and even lions by the simple expedient of driving her pointed front hoofs clean through her attackers.

In fact, when it comes to outright fights, once actually provoked, the most unexpected things happen.

A great boa constrictor is a hopeless wreck in a flash if a jaguar once makes a fair slash at his back muscles. But let him get a single coil around the cat and another around a branch and lift him off the ground . . . that's the end!

Tiger vs. Buffalo. Who Wins?

The great cats of Africa, the lion and the leopard, will seldom, if ever, attack buffalo, but the tiger of Asia will sometimes inadvertently do so. Buffalo fight back, and one has been seen to up and kill two tigers with a simple right and left side-swipe of its great, curved horns. Another was observed repeatedly charging a tiger until he backed the cat against a bank, then trampled him to death.

When it comes to a direct trial of strength one may expect equal surprises. In this there is one animal that is almost invariably the winner: the elephant.

Nothing can cope with its sheer bulk and that unique weapon, its trunk. By the same token, that armor-plated idiot, the rhinoceros, is seldom attacked, seldom defeated.

The hippopotamus, likewise, reigns more or less supreme in the rivers of Africa, apparently maintaining a truce with the crocodiles, though the bite of the former is probably the most terrible in nature and would settle even the largest crocodile in one snap.

The leopard is the natural enemy of the gorilla and customarily attacks and kills him, but let old man gorilla get a two-handed grip on the cat and you may witness a practical demonstration in mathematics —simple division. Gargantua could divide a human wrestler as we would a roll if he ever laid two hands on him in anger.

Gorillas, when fighting, usually seize their enemies, give them one great bite and then run. Except in extreme emergencies, however, peaceful gorillas invariably run first.

Desserts for the Holidays

HAVE YOU DISCOVERED the amazing new dessert powder that whips up, with cold milk (no cooking), into a pudding? Fast and good! We were so intrigued, we tried this instant dessert as a basis for four double-quick delicacies to climax holiday meals. Elaborate enough to be festive, these desserts won't rob you of precious time when there is so much else to be done. Of course we used a white cake mix for our cake layers and pie crust mix for the pie shell. If you don't have left-over cooked rice for the pudding, use a package of minute rice to speed things up. A can or jar of mincemeat makes the other pudding easy.

1 Mincemeat Cream Dessert

2 cups cold milk
1 cup prepared mincemeat
½ teaspoon lemon juice
1 pkg. instant vanilla dessert

Pour milk into large bowl; add mincemeat, lemon juice and instant vanilla dessert; whip rapidly with rotary beater 30 seconds, until smooth.

2 Mocha Cream Frosting

½ cup cold milk
½ cup cold strong coffee
½ cup sugar
1 pkg. instant chocolate dessert
2 tbsp. butter or margarine, melted

Pour milk into large bowl; add coffee, sugar and instant chocolate dessert; whip rapidly with rotary beater 30 seconds, until smooth. Add butter, continue whipping until blended. Fills and frosts two 8-inch cake layers.

3 Pumpkin Cream Pie

1 ¾ cups cold milk
1 cup canned pumpkin
2 tablespoons sugar
½ teaspoon cinnamon
¼ tsp. cloves
⅛ tsp. nutmeg
1 pkg. instant vanilla dessert

Pour milk into large bowl; add pumpkin, sugar, cinnamon, cloves, nutmeg and instant vanilla dessert; whip rapidly with rotary beater 30 seconds, until smooth. Turn into 9-inch baked pie shell; chill.

4 Maple Rice Pudding

2 ½ cups cold milk
¼ cup maple syrup
¼ teaspoon maple flavoring
1 pkg. instant vanilla dessert
2 cups cooked rice
½ cup raisins

Pour milk into large bowl; add maple syrup, flavoring and instant vanilla dessert; whip rapidly with rotary beater 30 seconds, until smooth. Combine rice and raisins in baking dish; pour maple mixture over this mixture; bake in moderate oven, 350°F., 25 minutes. The yield: 8 servings.

Wildcatter! HE HUNTS OIL WHERE TYCOONS FEAR TO TREAD

First step in a Berry operation: phoning friends and other businessmen to raise money. He has a good reputation.

NERVE AND SCIENCE ARE "WILDCAT" ASSETS

By SID ROSS and ERNEST LA FRANCE

WHENEVER Thomas E. Berry, 42, of Ripley, Okla., gets the itch to drill another oil well, he assumes his favorite working position (above), makes several phone calls ending in "Okay, I'll count you in," and proceeds with the well, which may cost up to $20,000 and be a total loss.

It is all the more strange because Berry (a) is no Rockefeller, (b) has no drilling equipment, (c) does not own the land he is considering drilling, and (d) does not guarantee oil.

Known in oil circles as a "wildcatter" (and proud of it) because he drills for oil on land the big companies don't consider worth the effort, he operates largely with other people's money (almost all wells are joint ventures), leased farm lands, hired driller companies, and the shrewd oil-sense he carries under his snow-white fedora.

A Hero in His Own Fashion

Ever since lucky Col. E. L. Drake in 1859 struck our first oil 59½ feet below the surface of Titusville, Pa., independent "wildcatters" have found 75 percent of our new fields. Yet, of the 6,875 "wildcat" wells drilled last year, only 1,030 struck oil, 245 struck gas, and 5,600 were "dry holes." The "wildcatters" are the industry's perpetual pioneers—always on the hunt.

Berry's ability to inspire oil hunts while figuratively reclining on the back of his neck is due to the scientific methods which he shares with today's oil industry, his tough honesty, and his superior luck, along with some expert praying. Backers (usually other expert oil men) are eager to risk money in return for a share of the well's output, if any.

Son of a Mormon minister who himself became a "wildcatter," Berry arrived at his profession via Oklahoma A.&M., where he was a Sigma Nu. In his carefree youth he was a watermelon peddler and soda jerk.

Lured by a report that Oklahoma still had a billion barrels underground, and using college-learned

Oil land maps, marked with previous strikes, help Berry decide on a location.

Geologist Dick Soper and Berry scientifically test for oil every 10 feet of drilling.

seismograph tests instead of the old-timers' "creekology," he sank his first well in 1931 and has shared in drilling 500 since.

Typical Berry well, and probably typical of all "wildcats," is Leach No. 1, named after the farmer who owns the land, drilled this year in a watermelon patch near his old college town of Stillwater, in Payne County.

After tests indicated oil strata 2,890 feet down, Berry offered to pay one-tenth of the cost of drilling a well and invited adjoining leaseholders to chip in. The W. C. Patton drilling company, using a $125,000 rig and three 4-man shifts, was hired to start sinking the shaft.

Six days later, at 2,870 feet, there was still no sign of oil. At 11 p.m., with a dangerous 70,000 pounds of pressure on the bit, and almost 2,900 feet of pipe underground, Berry started to sweat. As a precaution he cut the pressure to 50,000 pounds to save the drill. Two hours later, at 1:05 a.m., there was a smell of oil. Eight hours later, after numerous tests, Berry knew he and his associates had a producing well. It oozed 10 barrels a day.

Berry well already in operation indicates possible presence of oil in nearby fields. Berry made contract with neighboring farmer Leach to drill new well on property.

HOPE OF A RICH STRIKE LURES A "WILDCATTER" ON

Discouraged: Six days of drilling, with Leach No. 1 nearing 2,890-feet without revealing signs of oil, found geologist and Berry moodily considering giving up.

SOMEDAY, in every "wildcatter's" dreambook, he will stumble on another Spindletop, Humble, or Sour Lake golconda, all in their time discovered by "wildcatters" and producing millions of dollars worth of black gold.

The odds are against it. Of the 435,000 producing wells in America, and the 39,800 drilled last year, all but a fraction are in proved fields. In Oklahoma, thousands of holes have been sunk since the Cudahy Oil Company opened its pioneer field on the south bank of the slow-moving Caney River near Bartlesville. Most "wildcatters" struck "dry holes."

The will o' the wisp that keeps them going are the records of men like fabulous "Dad" Joiner, who "poor-boyed" a well on a shoestring to bring in a new rich field, and now-millionaires like Glenn McCarthy of Houston and H. L. Hunt of Dallas.

Oil Under Every Farm?

Colorado, Utah and Wyoming have an estimated 300,000,000,000 barrels of oil trapped in their oil shale waiting for someone to release it. Some of it will have to wait for new methods to extract it from the rocks, but that may happen tomorrow.

Berry and the 18,000 other independent operators (not all of them "wildcatters") have most of the available lands (not already owned by the big companies) under constant surveillance. Virtually every farmer in Oklahoma firmly believes that oil lies just under his watermelon patch, and "wildcatters" have drawersful of options.

Carefully developing his father's business, Tom Berry has cagily prepared himself for future efforts by buying up blocks of leases in 27 oil-producing states and Canada. "If I live long enough," he says, "I may give all of them a whack!" Meanwhile, a few barrels a day from several small wells keeps him going. (Conservation regulations govern the daily take even from the biggest wells.)

"Count Me In!"

In private life, Berry lives the life of the average well-off Oklahoman. His time is about equally spent between the Thomas N. Berry Co. (named after his father and consisting of a loose agglomeration of relations and in-laws), and his family, consisting of his wife and two children. His hobbies are swimming, hunting, growing roses, and watching cock-fights. His spare time is devoted to the activities of the Odd Fellows, Sigma Nu, and the American Rose Growers Assn.

His deals are conducted according to the strict oil country code, where "Count me in!" is considered a sacred contract, even over the phone. Thousands like Berry, operating under the same standards, aggressiveness, and rules of fair play, are constantly seeking and finding the oil we need.

At 12:10 a.m.: Berry told farmer Leach (right) well might flop. Oil came at 1:05.

Bone-tired at dawn, Berry ate watermelon breakfast in field. Well was "in" but poor.

In town, Berry, son Tom gather congratulations. He already had idea for new well.

TIPS TO SNORERS: Actor Al Kelly, America's premier double-talk specialist, has been doing a Dr. Kinsey on the subject of snoring. He reports that big time snoring is broadcast by only 12% of the population, equally divided between the sexes. Dogs also snore. But this distraction can be readily eliminated by hiring a puppy-sitter to keep feeding the dog 24 hours a day. Henry Mencken is reportedly one of the few snorers cured by an operation on his nose. The most practical silencers are of a mechanical nature—such as controlling the position of the snorer's head, to prevent the tongue from falling back; or placing a cotton-covered golf ball inside your husband's pajamas, thus preventing him from lying on his back. This treatment failing, it is recommended that the snorter's victim remove the cotton and stuff it in her ears. That may not prevent snoring but it is certainly less expensive than the cost of consulting a divorce attorney. Incidentally, Kelly also reveals that in many of the 48 states, snoring is considered grounds for divorce. When asked point blank whether he himself was a snorer, Kelly hedged. "To this day I'm not sure, Hy," he admitted. "Once I attached a wire recorder microphone to my bedside—but when I got up in the morning to play the thing back, all I could hear was Stokowski playing Beethoven's Fifth! (See what I mean about double-talk?)

GIRLS WILL BE GIRLS: Mrs. Frank Henderson, the 73-year-old socialite who recently enrolled at the Grace Downs Hollywood School for Models, has informed the school's director that if the course does anything for her she'll recommend it to her 94-year-old mother.

KEEPSAKE DEPT.: Joe DiMaggio's still carrying around a good-luck telegram he received before the World Series signed by 60 children in the Miami Beach Cardian Home. Joe's been almost as much an inspiration to these stricken youngsters as he was to the stricken Yankees . . .

SMALL-FRY NEWS: Toy shops have a new batch of hob-goblin' masks this Hallowe'en—likenesses of Hitler, Stalin, Groucho Marx and Humphrey Bogart . . . Incidentally, one of the most popular toys for kiddies this Christmas will be a Baby Panda. The manufacturer doubled his output after reading the headlines about Actor Humphrey Bogart and a friend getting caught with their Pandas down at the El Morocco Club in New York . . .

HERE GOES THE BRIDE: I learn from an unimpeachable source (meaning my wife!)—that Reno, the Divorce Capital of the World, is thinking of adopting the song, "I'm Gonna Wash That Man Right Out of My Hair," as a sort of national anthem . . .

ANATOMICAL QUERY: Producer Darryl Zanuck's statement that Betty Grable is awfully popular overseas makes sense. Nevertheless, I have a hunch that Europe is less interested in Miss Grable's Million Dollar Legs than they are in Uncle Sam's Billion Dollar Arms . . .

OBSERVATION WARD: Mr. Ezio Pinza's first movie for M-G-M will have him playing the role of Mario Lanza's father. Lanza, hailed as a second Caruso in his first picture, "That Midnight Kiss," is the singing find of the year. But I'd rather be a First Pinza than a Second Caruso . . . Jackie Mercer, Miss America of 1949, wears a half-inch gold band on her second finger, left hand. No special significance, though—it was her Granny's wedding ring . . . If you're worried some time about oversleeping for a special date, send yourself a wake-up telegram. Western Union will either phone you or get a messenger to shake you into consciousness at the specified time . . .

Confession?—Ask The Man Who Goes There!

Catholics go to Confession to a priest for one reason only: to obtain divine forgiveness for their sins.

But why, you ask, go to a priest? Why not confess our sins directly to God?

Ask the man who goes to Confession and here's what he will tell you: Sin is an offense against God, it must be forgiven by God. It is God, not man, who determines how forgiveness must be obtained. Christ plainly pointed this out when He empowered His Apostles and their successors to forgive sins or to refuse forgiveness.

"Whose sins you shall forgive," Christ said, "they are forgiven them; whose sins you shall retain, they are retained." (John 20:21-23). Thus Christ authorized the Apostles, and their successors, to pardon or to deny pardon as they judged the sinner worthy or unworthy. To do this they had to know what they were forgiving ... the secret dispositions of the sinner ... his sorrow and willingness to repair the wrong done to his neighbor by his sins. Who could make this known but the sinner himself—and what is this but Confession?

But Confession—the Sacrament of Penance—is only one of the seven Sacraments Christ left in His Church. Yes, seven—no more and no less! Christ's religion is not merely a message to be accepted, but a life to be lived—from the cradle to the grave. Christ's seven Sacraments are the answer to man's seven basic needs.

Man is born, but he needs to be reborn a Christian in the Sacrament of Baptism. He is nourished, but he needs Christian nourishment in Holy Communion, the Sacrament of the Eucharist. He grows, but he needs to grow and be strengthened in Christian life by the Sacrament of Confirmation. He is cured of disease, but he needs a remedy for sin, so destructive of Christian life, and this he finds in the Sacrament of Penance.

Man lives in society which needs officials to promote the common good—and for his life in the Church, he finds officials provided by the Sacrament of Orders. He perpetuates the human race in marriage, which Christ made the Sacrament of Matrimony. And at death, he needs consolation and strength for the last dread hour which he finds in the Last Anointing—the Sacrament of Extreme Unction.

FREE—Would you like to know more about each of the seven Sacraments? How they can help you to meet the seven basic needs of your life? Then write today for a free pamphlet which gives important information concerning them. Ask for Pamphlet No. 5-PR.

Teaching shut-ins without aid of home-to-school intercom system means bringing blackboard into sickroom. Teacher (right), one of local school's visiting staff, assigns and checks the lessons.

GOING TO SCHOOL ...VIA TELEPHONE

By Lawrence Galton

PROPPED UP IN BEDS or wheelchairs, hundreds of sick or crippled children are going to school this year even though they can't leave home.

Thanks to a revolutionary educational development, these youngsters now answer "present" every morning to roll call in the classroom.

Over telephone lines, they hear everything the teacher says. They recite, in their turn, and every word is heard by teacher and fellow students.

Secret of this "telephoned education" idea is an intercommunication system similar to the type used in business offices. Hooked up between school and home, it is making education by remote control an exciting reality. Microphones and loudspeakers in the schoolroom and in the child's bedroom make two-way discussion possible.

Tests in dozens of Iowa communities have produced results like these:

A young girl in Des Moines was stricken with polio in 1944, just three weeks after school began. Yet she graduated in 1948 after being in her high school only three times since she became sick.

An 11-year-old boy, another polio victim in another Iowa community, has maintained an average of 93 in all his subjects.

One youngster who hasn't been inside a classroom for years was chosen homeroom reporter for the school paper. And one 14-year-old boy, bed-ridden with infantile paralysis, was elected president of his high school class.

Helps Mental Attitude

There's a marked therapeutic effect, too. "When minds like these can be kept busy," notes an article in the Journal of Education, "medical science is given a chance to work upon maimed bodies."

One 12-year-old boy suffering from the results of rheumatic fever used to be moody, despondent. Now, attending school every day by wire, an amazing change has taken place; he has become a happy, zestful youngster.

In an article in "California Schools," Harry D. Hicker, Chairman of the Commis-

Intercom can bring classroom into the home . . .

Classroom talk is picked up on intercom (right of teacher) for broadcast to student shut-ins over telephone line. Some civic and philanthropic groups hope to sponsor such systems locally.

sion for Special Education, has called the new development "a near substitute for actual class attendance, with the benefits of a complete curriculum, daily instruction on the same basis as other students, and the satisfaction of 'belonging.'"

In February, 1948, a conference of the National Education Association in Atlantic City recognized its significance.

In 1939, after a series of polio epidemics had spotlighted the problem of handicapped children, the Iowa Department of Public Instruction had made a determined search for some practical, economical solution. Finally, the idea of a commercial intercommunication system for school-to-home use came up.

System Can Expand

Executone, Inc., a maker of such systems, went to work on the technical difficulties. A special amplifier was designed, so sensitive that the slightest whisper anywhere in the classroom could be heard by the student at home.

In New York this week, the National Society for Crippled Children and Adults will demonstrate a school-to-home system in operation as a feature of its national convention. A child in bed will participate in a class in session several miles away.

Right now, not only boards of education but various crippled aid societies, philanthropic groups, Kiwanis, Rotary and women's clubs are ready to sponsor the system in their communities.

The cost? This is yet to be worked out, but once the intercom equipment has been bought by school boards or sponsoring civic groups the cost of the phone line may run only a dollar or two a month in cities, probably somewhat higher in rural areas.

With intercom, bedfast child at home shares class discussion, keeps pace with those at school.

Recorded lesson, heard here by girl and teacher at home, is also used as a classroom contact.

QUEEN LORELEI II

Blond Queen Lorelei II (actress Gregg Sherwood), arriving for fete, is escorted from yacht by King Neptune II (J. M. Eason).

Miss Who?

Seafood or sauerkraut queen, she is the press agent's best friend

PICK ANY TOWN in the U.S., and you can find a girl who can wear a crown like a queen and look mighty pretty as Miss What-have-you. Right: five chosen from current queen crop.

Orange Princess: Patty Glynn reigned at the Los Angeles Fair.

King, Queen and retinue arrive at Hampton aboard "bugeye-rigged" (rakish masts) Gypsy II, converted fishing schooner that plied Chesapeake Bay for nine years in seafood trade.

At King Neptune's Ball, clarinetist Benny Goodman obligingly tootles for Queen Lorelei.

$1.00 fish dinner—oysters, chowder, flounder, deviled crab—was served to more than 3,000.

EVER SINCE the first shapely girl in a bathing suit was crowned Miss America at Atlantic City in 1921, eager U. S. press agents have been crowning Miss Something-or-others every hour on the hour. They are sure-fire eye catchers.

Today there are even Miss Railroad Fairs, Miss Sauerkrauts, Miss Adam's Ribs, and others ad infinitum.

Latest names in the royal lineage were added by the Junior Woman's Club of Hampton, Va., which sponsors a $25,000 annual National Seafood Festival at Hampton. Among the shapely nobility were Queen Lorelei II, Miss Crab, Miss Oyster and 21 Seafood Princesses from eight seafood states—Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Maine, Maryland, New Jersey, North Carolina and Virginia.

The Festival, trumpeting products of the seafood industry, included a coronation, a dance for 10,000 and a monster fish fry.

Waving prettily from deck of the Gypsy II is Sara Shields, who, as Miss Maryland, was one of seven maids of honor to the Queen.

Miss America of 1949: Queen of queens is Jacqueline Mercer, Phoenix, Arizona

Farmerette Princess: Jayne Moore glamorized pork at Los Angeles County Fair.

Sauerkraut Queen: Marguerite Raymond ruled sauerkraut fete at Forreston, Ill.

Miss Railroad Fair, 1949: Miss Marianne Demereckis queened it in Chicago.

PLUMBING by John G. Miller METAL WORKING by ELECTRICAL WORK by
MASONRY by Kenneth Holmes Bailey

Here, in six great volumes, is EVERYTHING you need to know to do ANY job in or around your home—repairs, alterations, new projects

The Most Useful Books You'll Ever Own!

Every page of this brand-new, "how-to-do-it" library is crammed with useful information about carpentry, metalwork, plumbing, masonry, electrical work, painting and decorating. The authors explain in careful detail the most efficient, the most workmanlike way to cut woodworker's joints, splice wires, thread pipe, "flow on" varnish or shellac, mix paint, mortar, cement, etc. They give you complete information about the varieties of wood, kinds of pipe, types and sizes of electrical wiring, etc. Every move in the use of tools is shown by vivid, hands-at-work photographs. All important operations and those "tricks of the trade" that play so great a part in good craftsmanship are explained and made crystal-clear by detailed step-by-step drawings. There are complete directions, fully illustrated, for thousands of jobs—large and small—from replacing a sash cord to shingling a roof; from papering a room to installing a hot-water heater; from waterproofing concrete to fitting storm windows; from varnishing a chair to painting a house.

PAINTING & DECORATING

Practical illustrations show you how to beautify your home, inside and out. How to select colors and mix paints. How to do stippling, stencilling, etc., etc.

This great book gives complete color schemes for every room in the house. Contains tables and formulas for obtaining any desired hue. There are full directions for the selection and care of brushes and other equipment. How to calculate amount of paint required, and best methods of applying to wood, metal, brick, concrete, stone, stucco, plaster. Exterior house painting—interior house painting. Methods of finishing with stain, shellac, varnish, and wax. Proper stains for each variety of wood. How to refinish an auto quickly, easily, inexpensively, and with a minimum of equipment and materials. The section on wall papering is especially complete and detailed—how to size the wall before applying paste, how to lay out the room to insure proper "run" of the pattern, how to apply paste, hang the paper smoothly, etc.

ELECTRICAL WORK

Here is practical information about every electrical job the home mechanic may undertake around the house or in the home workshop. Principles of electricity—volts, amperes, ohms. Tools, materials, and requirements of National Electrical Code. Complete, fully illustrated explanations of every step in various operations of general electrical work—splicing, soldering, taping, testing, etc. Installation of various signalling systems—bells, buzzers, and alarms. Wiring methods for power and lighting circuits. Complete projects for the home, such as BX wiring a room, and wiring a garage in conduit are made clear by diagram and photographs. Also, there are instructions for adjusting oil burners, refrigerators, pumps, etc.

Cut-away views make it easy to repair all household appliances—vacuum cleaners, irons, radios, fans etc., etc.

PLUMBING

Hands-at-work photographs show you exactly how to install, repair and insulate pipes, fittings, etc.

This complete volume answers every question about the repair, the cleaning and the maintenance of the entire plumbing system. The various kinds of pipe, pipe fittings, valves, and fixtures are described in detail. There is full information about all common plumbing tools—types, functions, and how to use them. How to cut, ream, thread, and assemble iron and brass pipe. How to connect copper tubing and make lead joints. The technique of pipe fitting, and the proper sequence of steps in assembling a piping system. There are complete details about installing a hot-water heater, radiator and various other units, and instructions for fixing leaks in faucets and valves, repairing a faulty section of pipe, etc. This great book gives the home mechanic every fact he needs to know in order to undertake all practical plumbing jobs with full assurance of good results.

MASONRY

Every practical fact about concrete, plastering, stucco, brick work, concrete-block and glass-block construction is made clear in this handbook. Every repair or new-construction project described can be accomplished by a man who never before has done masonry work. It describes all tools, and explains just how to use them. How to specify materials and estimate quantities. How to build forms; mix concrete, color it, make it watertight. Material charts. Types of construction. Various bonds. Working with concrete blocks. Kinds and sizes of glass blocks. Glass-block construction—full-mortar joints, set-in-wood construction, etc., etc. All facts in this great volume are fully and clearly explained.

Improve your property without special skill or expensive tools. Make your own repairs: do plastering, stuccoing, etc. Build a brick fireplace, a flagstone walk, concrete steps, etc., etc.

WOODWORKING

This exceptionally interesting volume describes the many varieties of wood and their relative merits, working qualities, and uses. Plywoods, veneers, and wood substitutes—how to choose the materials best suited for the job. All the basic operations and processes of woodworking—everything from how to avoid warping to full directions for cutting each of the common joints. Wood turning—the different cuts, roughing, facing, sanding, and finishing; drilling, boring, morticing, spinning, polishing. Hundreds of repair jobs and new-construction projects, both inside and outside the home, are fully explained with diagrams and every fact you need to get the very best results. The new-construction work ranges from making a chair to reshingling a roof; from screening a porch to building a coal bin.

Making your own tables, chairs, benches, bookcases, cabinets, etc., is great fun and a real money-saving hobby. Step-by-step pictures show you every move in the use of tools and materials.

METALWORKING

Here you will find complete information about all the common metals and the alloys—wrought iron, cast iron, steel, German silver, pewter, the brasses and bronzes, solders and Babbitts. For each of these there is given the most complete information about working qualities and uses, sizes and shapes obtainable, color, weight, identification, resistance to corrosion, and every other detail you need to select the best material for your purpose. Hand tools and machine tools—their specific purposes, sizes, and the most detailed instructions for their use. How to use the engine lathe. Included are metal jobs and projects for home and shop, complete with bill of material, equipment needed, and a fully illustrated account of every step in the work.

Simple directions and "tricks of the trade" make repairs to roofs, gutters, downspouts, etc., easy and inexpensive. And, you'll find ideas for making useful and beautiful articles of copper, wrought iron, etc.

LET'S EXPLORE YOUR MIND
by ALBERT EDWARD WIGGAM D.Sc.
1. IS IT EASIER FOR BOTH MEN AND WOMEN TO SEE THROUGH A WOMAN THAN THROUGH A MAN? YOUR OPINION ___
2. IF WITH A GADGET YOU COULD STOP THE DENTIST FROM USING HIS INFERNAL MACHINE ON YOUR TOOTH WOULD YOU USE IT? YES ☐ NO ☐
3. DOES A DEFECT ON A WOMAN'S FACE ADD TO HER BEAUTY? YES ☐ NO ☐
4. DO WOMEN HAVE A GREATER TENDENCY TO "FEEL JUST MISERABLE" THAN MEN? YES ☐ NO ☐ 11-6

Answer No. 1

Apparently yes. Seventy women and 67 men rated 77 school boys and 77 girls on such traits as conscientiousness, kindliness, temper etc. Both men and women judged the girls more accurately than the boys. Had the subjects been adults it undoubtedly would have turned out the same way. It certainly seems easier to see through a woman than a man. Just what we men knew all along!

Answer No. 2

No. Such a gadget was invented in England before War II. The patient held a press button with which he could stop the machine when the drilling got too painful. But the self-confidence the patient gained from knowing he could control the machine prevented him from stopping it. Other experiments show knowing you can end a dangerous situation if you wish, keeps you from doing so.

Answer No. 3

Certainly. As shown by the late psychologist, Joseph Jastrow, this is why a woman wears a "beauty patch". By contrast, this apparent defect heightens the beauty of the rest of her face. A small mole or scar, a few freckles, often make a woman's face more attractive. Only large, disfiguring defects detract. After countless tests of women for beauty and intelligence, let me say that a woman without some beauty does not exist.

Answer No. 4

Yes. According to psychiatrists, psychologists and as shown by scientific "Personality Inventories". On these you rate yourself on 200 or more personality traits such as "tendency to have useless thoughts", "feel just miserable", be suspicious of others", etc. Women check "frequently feel just miserable without any special cause" far more often than men. No wonder! How could they help feeling that way having to live with us men?

DOTTY DRIPPLE

HORACE, I'VE TURNED THE CARE OF THE ENTIRE HOUSE OVER TO THE CHILDREN FOR TODAY - LIKE DR. BIGBRAIN, THE FAMOUS CHILD PSYCHOLOGIST, SUGGESTS!
GOOD JOB OF CLEANING, BUT WHAT'LL THEY DO ABOUT OUR DINNER?
OH, WE'RE TAKING YOU AND MOM OUT TO DINNER, DADDY!
ON MY MONEY, I SUPPOSE!
OH, I HAVE PLENTY FOR THAT, UNCLE HORACE!
AND I HAVE ENOUGH TO BAIL THEM OUT IF THEY CAN'T MAKE IT!

CHILDREN, THAT WAS A WONDERFUL DINNER -- WASN'T IT, HORACE?
S-SURE!
UH -- WILBERT, WHERE DID YOU GET THAT FIST FULL OF DOUGH?!
11-4
I FOUND IT UNDER THE DINING ROOM RUG!
OH, OH! I MIGHT HAVE KNOWN IT!!!
HORACE! WHAT'S THE MATTER? YOU LOOK LIKE YOU HAD INDIGESTION!
WHY SHOULDN'T I? I JUST ATE THE HEAVY-DUTY JIGSAW I WAS SAVING UP TO BUY!

REX MORGAN, M.D.

SO OUR NEW PATIENT, MR. MORGAN, IS SURE HE HAS CANCER, EH, SQUEAKY? WELL, THAT SHOULD MAKE MY JOB VERY EASY!
HE'S BEEN TO A LOT OF DOCTORS AND THEY ALL SAY HE'S OKAY! ... ONLY HE DON'T BELIEVE THEM!
GOOD! THEN I'LL SIMPLY CONFIRM HIS SUSPICIONS!
YEAH, AND IF ANYONE CAN, IT'S YOU, PROFESSOR!
DOES HE HAVE MONEY?
HE DIDN'T SAY WHAT HE DOES FOR A LIVING BUT HE DID SAY THAT IF YOU TAKE CARE OF HIM, HE'LL TAKE GOOD CARE OF YOU!
BRADLEY EDGINGTON
SORRY TO HOLD YOU UP, MR. MORGAN, BUT I WAS JUST REVIEWING YOUR CASE WITH ALBERT HERE, MY ASSISTANT!
HAVE YOU COME TO ANY CONCLUSIONS?

I WILL WITHHOLD AN OPINION UNTIL I HAVE VERIFIED IT BY MY SCIENTIFIC STUDIES ... BUT YOUR SYMPTOMS HAVE ME THINKING IN TERMS OF A POSSIBLE EARLY MALIGNANCY!
IT'S EXACTLY WHAT MR. MORGAN AND I WERE AFRAID YOU'D FIND, DOCTOR! TELL ME, PLEASE ... CAN YOU HELP HIM?
NOW, NOW, MRS. MORGAN ... YOU MUST BE BRAVE!
PLEASE, DEAR ... DON'T CRY! I'M SURE THE PROFESSOR WILL BE ABLE TO TAKE CARE OF EVERYTHING!
IT'S GOOD TO KNOW I HAVE YOUR CONFIDENCE, YOUNG MAN!
REX MORGAN, M.D.

CHILDREN AREN'T BAD, MRS. O'TOOLE—THEY'RE MERELY PERVERSE BY INSTINCT!
THAT'S WHAT YOU THINK

DIXIE—I DON'T MEAN TO BE RUDE—BUT WHAT DO YOU KNOW ABOUT CHILDREN? YOU'RE NOT EVEN MARRIED!
I HAVE A NIECE—

MYRTLE THROWS A PARTY
DIDN'T I TELL YOU MYRTLE WOULD FREEZE ONTO WALTON JUST THE MINUTE HE CAME IN?
SHE THINKS HE'S BIG-TIME JUST BECAUSE HE'S WEARING LONG PANTS.
LET'S PLAY POST OFFICE. THAT'LL BUST IT UP!
OH-OH! WAIT UNTIL SUSIE SEES THAT POP BOTTLE ON HER NEW TABLE!
WAIT TEN YEARS UNTIL MYRTLE'S FRIENDS LAY CIGARETTES ON THE PIANO.
I COULD HAVE WORN LONG PANTS, TOO, BUT NOBODY TOLD ME THIS WAS FORMAL.
LET'S START SOMETHING. WANT TO WRESTLE?
IF I'D KNOWN MYRTLE WAS INVITING GIRLS, I WOULDN'T HAVE COME.
MYRTLE SAID TO TAKE UP THE RUGS!
TELL POP HE CAN COME FOR ME ANYTIME! THE PARTY IS DYING ON ITS FEET!
SEE, DEAR! I TOLD YOU RICHARD WOULD BE ALL RIGHT!
REMEMBER, ALICE, HOW WE USED TO SIT OUT ON THE END OF THE LIMB AND LET THE GIRLS HAVE DANCES IN THE NEST?
GOSH! THAT SEEMS LIKE A LONG TIME AGO!
OF COURSE I WANT THEM TO HAVE A GOOD TIME, BUT I DON'T THINK THEY NEED TO PLAY THOSE RECORDS QUITE SO LOUD!
RELAX, SUSIE. IT'S WHEN THEY'RE TOO QUIET THAT YOU HAVE TO WORRY ABOUT THEM!
COME ON, FREDDIE. WIPE THAT GLOOM OFF YOUR FACE! I SAT IN THE KITCHEN FOR THREE YEARS WHILE YOU WERE COURTING SUSIE!
I KNOW, BUT MYRTLE GETS TOO WILD, AND WE DON'T KNOW MUCH ABOUT HER PARENTS, AND I JUST WANTED TO BE SURE.
I THOUGHT YOU AND ARNOLD WERE GOING TO PLAY CHESS!
WE ARE PLAYING! IT'S ARNOLD'S FIRST MOVE!
YEH, BUT YOU HAD A COAL STOVE AND YOU COULD TAKE OFF YOUR SHOES AND PUT YOUR FEET ON THE HEARTH!

By Arthur Folwell-Kin Platt

WHAT ARE YOU LOOKING AT?
THE HAT-CHECK GIRL JUST CAME IN JOE, A WAITER WILL BE COMING SOON TO TAKE OUR ORDER. WHAT ARE WE GOING TO EAT?
EAT? OH! YES, YES, OF COURSE
I BELIEVE YOU'RE WORRIED ABOUT WHAT TO DO WITH YOUR HAT AND COAT
NONSENSE! BUT THE GIRL CAN SEE THEM FROM WHERE SHE IS STANDING
YOU'VE TOLD ME TIME AND AGAIN THAT A HAT-CHECK GIRL CAN'T KEEP THE TIPS MEN GIVE HER, SHE JUST WORKS FOR A SMALL SALARY, THAT THE MONEY SHE COLLECTS GOES TO THE PROPRIETOR OF THE RESTAURANT
THAT'S RIGHT. BUT ON THE OTHER HAND--
MAYBE I OUGHT TO TAKE MY HAT AND COAT UP TO HER. BUT NO! I'LL BE DARNED IF I WILL, WHEN WE'RE HALF WAY THROUGH OUR DINNER
WELL, I SHOULD SAY NOT. YOU STAY RIGHT WHERE YOU ARE. THE IDEA!
NOV-6-49-
MAYBE I OUGHT TO PUT A QUARTER ON HER TRAY ON OUR WAY OUT
WHY DON'T YOU ASK FOR THE PROPRIETOR AND GIVE IT TO HIM? YOU ALWAYS SAY HE GETS IT, ANYWAY
I DON'T BELIEVE YOU ENJOYED YOUR DINNER THE LEAST BIT
DID, TOO. HURRY UP! LET'S GET OUT OF HERE
